Lawyers failing in case against Hart, judge says

by LYNN ASINOF

After two days of testimony, U.S. District Court Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz Tuesday told federal prosecutors that the government has not yet proved its conspiracy case against former Wheeling Trustee William Hart.

During a discussion at the bench at the end of Tuesday's court session, Judge Marovitz told assistant U.S. attorneys Howard Stone and Steven Kadison that the testimony so far, "I would have to find him (Hart) not guilty, and he hasn't even testified yet."

Judge Marovitz said he sympathized with prosecution witness Bernard Wasmer, the alleged victim of an extortion plot involving Hart. The judge, however, said that in a criminal case, the government must prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. He said that testimony so far had not done so.

The judge's comments followed a full day's cross-examination of Wasmer by Hart's attorney, John Coughlin. Judge Marovitz also chastized Coughlin several times during testimony for asking repetitive questions and covering material irrelevant to the charge.

HART IS ACCUSED of conspiracy with James Stavros, former Wheeling Township Democratic committeeman, and William Bleber, former Wheeling building director, to commit extortion against Wasmer, owner of Duo Sign Co. of Wheeling.

The alleged conspiracy was intended to force the cancellation of an agreement between Hart and Wasmer signed at the time Wasmer purchased Duo from Hart in September, 1970.

For an extra $5,000 added to the purchase price of the company, Hart agreed not to engage in the sign business within 75 miles of Wheeling.

Wasmer Monday had outlined continuous harassment and threats from Bleber and Stavros after Hart, who moved to Florida in 1970, returned to Wheeling in late 1971. Hart later opened Nite and Day Electric Sign Co. of Wheeling in partnership with former village trustee Michael Valenza.

DURING MONDAY'S testimony, Judge Marovitz said the government had proved that a conspiracy took place and ruled that testimony about conversations between Wasmer and Stavros or between Wasmer and Bleber were admissible as evidence against Hart.

Stavros and Bleber, originally charged as part of the conspiracy, are no longer defendants in the case.

Under questioning Tuesday by Coughlin, Wasmer said he still fears that Hart might take measures against him. He said his fear of Hart decreased somewhat after he was led to believe that the former trustee would be indicted by a federal grand jury.

Hart, Stavros, Bleber and Valenza were among six past and present Wheeling and Cook County officials indicted Jan. 31 in a federal probe of shakedowns of Wheeling developers. Stavros, Valenza and Bleber have pleaded guilty to various charges.

Coughlin also questioned Wasmer at length on whether he was engaged in the electric sign business. Wasmer maintained that he did accept electric sign work, despite Coughlin's attempts to show that Wasmer did not belong to the proper labor union to do electrical wiring.

WASMER SAID that while he could not do electrical wiring, he could make plastic sign faces for electrical signs. Coughlin was attempting to show that Hart did not violate the agreement because his electric sign company did not compete with Duo's painted sign business.

After several hours of cross-examination, Coughlin's questioning evoked angry responses from Wasmer, who at one time pounded the witness stand with his fist.

Wasmer told the court he had always been in the electric sign business but electric signs were "suddenly out of my domain" after Hart returned from Florida. He said he then became afraid to tell anyone Duo could provide electric signs because Stavros, Bleber and Hart would put him out of business.

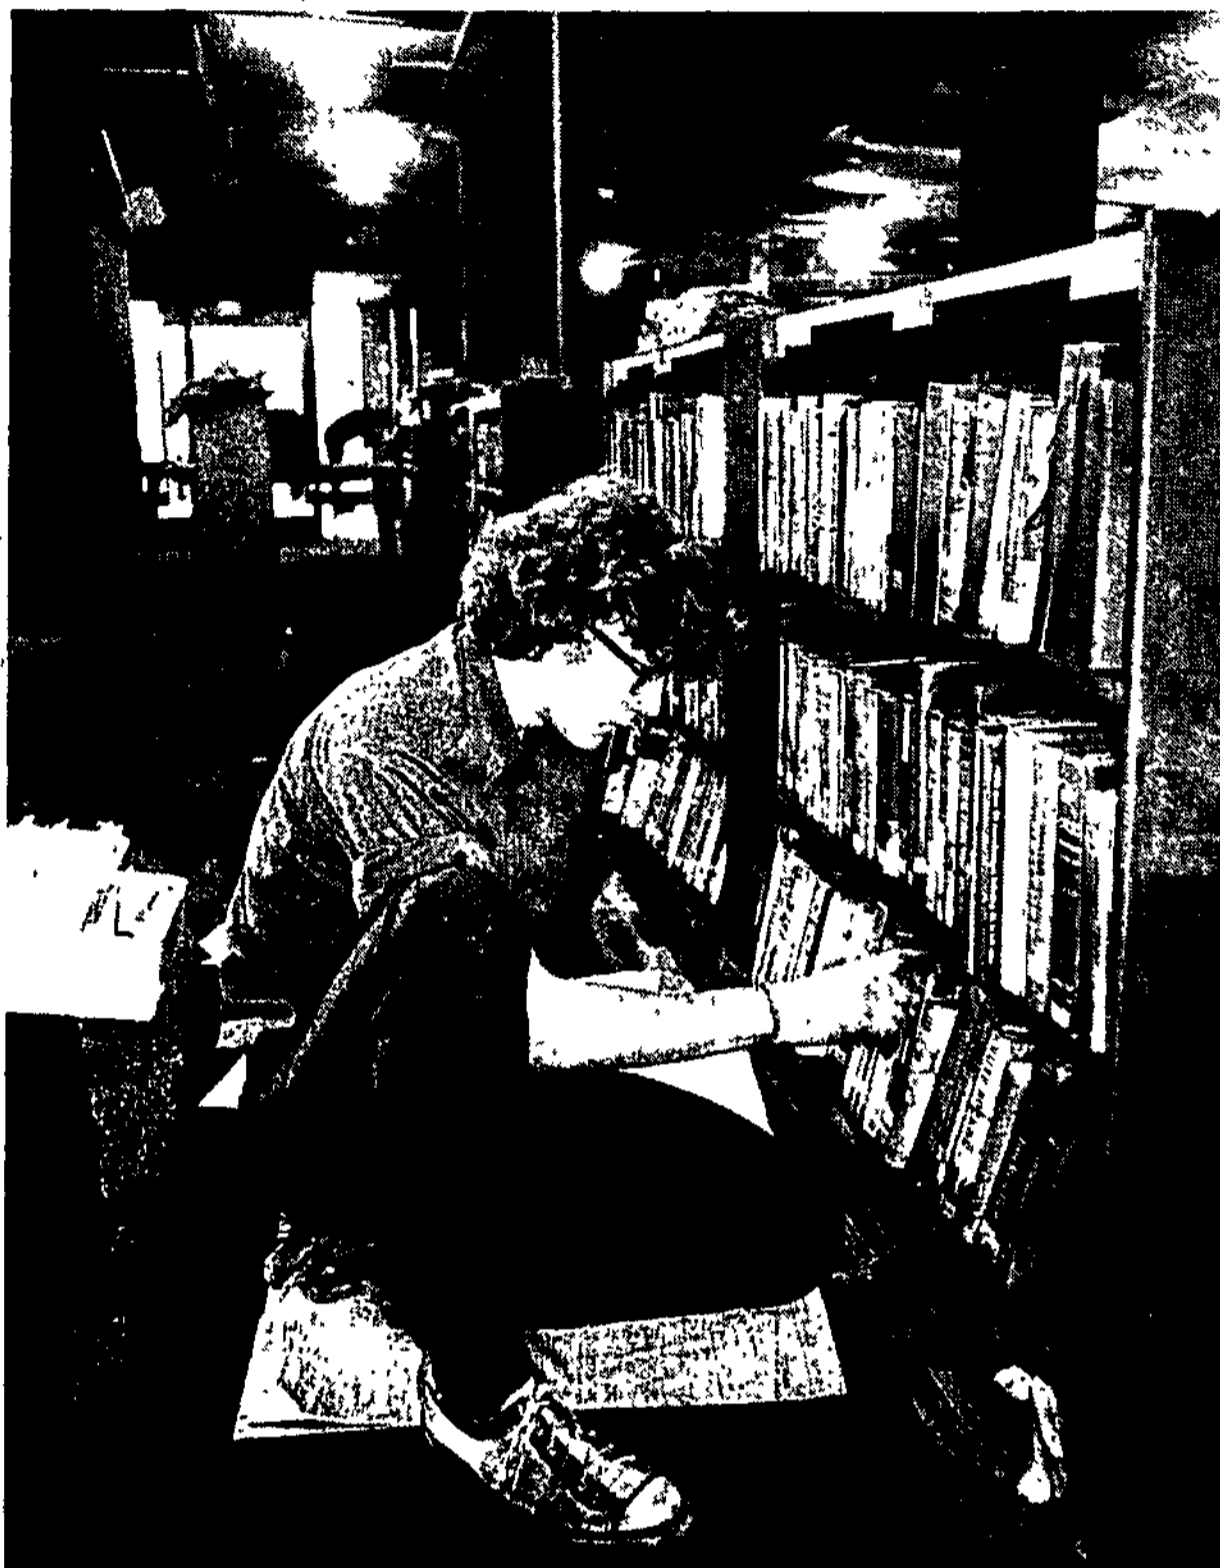

COUGHLIN ALSO tried to show that Wasmer did not suffer economic loss because of the alleged conspiracy. Wasmer admitted that no existing contracts were lost, but said future work promised him by Hollywood Builders, a local developer, failed to materialize as a result of the alleged conspiracy.

Coughlin attacked the accuracy of a diary kept by Wasmer between November 1971 and February 1972. Wasmer had used the diary Monday in recalling repeated threats and harassment he said were made by Stavros and Bleber.

The defense attorney at one point pulled a magnifying glass from his pocket to scrutinize the diary entries and questioned Wasmer about the depth of impressions made on the pages written by Wasmer.

At another point, Coughlin handed the diary to Wasmer to refresh his memory and in doing so knocked over a water glass on the witness stand, spilling the water on Wasmer. The courtroom erupted with laughter.

Cross-examination of Wasmer will continue today. Among the witnesses expected to be called in the bench trial are Valenza and trustee John Koeppen for the prosecution, and Bleber for the defense.

Surveillance system faulty

Schools may cancel monitor contract

The Dist. 21 Board of Education will consider cancelling a contract with the firm that installed an $85,000 surveillance system that still isn't working nine months past the completion deadline.

In January, the board threatened to take legal action against Temptron Inc. for failing to make the system function satisfactorily. The complex electronic system is designed to monitor schools and the administration building to prevent damage from fire and vandalism.

Instead of placing the company in default in January, the board opted to hire a consulting engineer to determine the exact nature of the problems with the system.

Now school officials again are considering cancelling the Temptron contract and apparently feel the company will never be able to complete the job.

DIST. 21 Supt. Kenneth Gill said Tuesday attorneys for the district are studying the Temptron contract and will be present at a special school board meeting Thursday to discuss the possibility of suing the company. The meeting is set for 8:15 p.m. at the administration building.

If the school board decides to take that route, it would invoke the performance bond posted by Temptron and request that the bonding company seek another firm to finish the job.

Gill said the individual components of the system appear to be functioning separately, but problems occur when the unit works as a whole.

The surveillance system consists of sensors placed in each of the 17 schools in the district, which are monitored by a computer in the administration building.

THE SENSORS are intended to detect heat and motion within the buildings and malfunctions in the heating systems. The problems are relayed to the central computer by electronic impulses, triggering alarms in the operations office where the console is set up. The person monitoring the computer then contacts the fire department, police or maintenance personnel to correct the trouble.

Gill said although the computer has reported some boiler failures at local schools in the past few months and prevented vandalism at Frost School in Mount Prospect two weeks ago, last weekend windows were broken at three different schools without detection.

Businessmen accept Dundee Rd. plan

Buffalo Grove apparently has won the blessing of local businessmen for its Dundee Road beautification program and will submit the plan to the State of Illinois for approval.

The village board met with representatives from a number of businesses Monday night to go over proposed revisions in the beautification plan. The plan calls for trees and grass to be planted on numerous islands scattered over the two mile strip which runs from Trace Drive to Cambridge Drive.

The Buffalo Grove Chamber of Commerce submitted a petition to the village board last week opposing the plan. At that time, board members agreed to meet with the businessmen to work out a compromise.

THE CHAMBER of Commerce contended that the original plan, which called for a planted, raised median in some places, would hurt business, create traffic hazards, restrict business activity and development and pose a maintenance problem for the village.

Businessmen particularly were concerned that the high curbs would prevent cars from turning into shopping areas and divert shoppers to other areas that are easier to reach. Under the original plan there would have been openings in the median where motorists could turn left into shopping areas. Many businessmen, however, said there were not enough openings and motorists would be unable to get to some places.

The village has agreed to increase the number of openings and lower the median in some places to allow motorists to turn into virtually every business along the road.

THE REVISED plan must be approved by the state and federal government before it becomes reality. Village Pres. Gary Armstrong said he is not sure whether all of the changes will be acceptable to the state.

In some cases, the village has suggested the median be lowered near intersections and Armstrong said this may not meet the state's safety standards.

Armstrong said, however, that the state planned to put a barrier median in front of his station even before the village suggested the beautification program. He said the village could not make the change and suggested Wilson contact the state and register a complaint.

ALBERT SIFRER, project engineer for the state, said last week the plan probably will be approved only if a near-unanimous number of businessmen approve of it.

The Chamber of Commerce will obtain a copy of the revised plan and is expected to make a formal decision at its next meeting.

If the plan is approved by all the necessary parties, it would be implemented after construction on Dundee Road is completed.

Trustee Randall Rathjen opposed forwarding the revised beautification plan to the state because the village has not yet determined how much it will cost. Other board members, however, said the cost should be investigated after the state approves the plan.

Bakery burglarized of $1,200 in cash

Burglars took $1,200 cash Sunday or Monday morning from Dietz's Bakery, 5 E. Camp McDonald Rd., Prospect Heights.

Cook County Sheriff's police said a rock was apparently used to smash the front door window of the bakery sometime between 1 p.m. Sunday and 9 a.m. Monday. Also taken in the burglary was $300 worth of checks marked "for deposit only." Police are investigating the burglary.

FATHER PATRICK CAHILL

Theory hangs on sequence of deaths

Son, 17, suspected in Park Ridge murders

From Herald news services

Investigators said Tuesday four members of a Park Ridge family died of gunshot wounds, strangulation or stabbing. The "prime theory" was that the killer was a 17-year-old son who was also found dead of unknown causes in their fire-scarred ranch home.

Police Sgt. John Bauderk said efforts by coroner's pathologists to determine through chemical tests how Jeffrey Fuchs died was "obviously the key to the murders" of his mother, father, sister and brother.

Crucial to the investigation is the report from the coroner's office pertaining to the timing of the boy's death. If the 17-year-old Fuchs boy is determined to have died before other members of his family, it is "back to the drawing boards," according to Sgt. Bauderk. If, however, the boy's death came after the deaths of his parents, sister and brother, then police theories about the killings may be well-founded.

THE BLANKET-WRAPPED bodies of Raymond A. Fuchs, 48, his wife Ruth, 48, son, Scott, 15, and daughter, Lynda, 14, were found in the basement of the suburban home Monday by firemen answering a fire alarm. Jeffrey's body was found upstairs in the kitchen.

Coroner Andrew J. Toman's office said autopsies showed Fuchs and Lynda died of multiple gunshot wounds. Scott was strangled with a nylon clothesline, and Mrs. Fuchs died of strangulation with the same clothesline and stab wounds in the neck.

The initial autopsy failed to disclose the cause of death of Jeffrey, who picked up his diploma from high school last Friday but refused to participate in the commencement exercises.

The coroner said there were no external wounds or burns on Jeffrey's body and chemical tests to determine the cause of death would require four to five days. All five family members had been dead more than 24 hours when their bodies were found, investigators said.

BAUDEK, ASKED IF investigators believed Jeffrey went on a mass killing spree, said, "We're forced to make this our prime theory at this time. We have no indication that the killer was an outsider."

He speculated that, if the youth was the killer, he might have committed suicide by unknown means or might have died accidentally in a fire set to hide the crimes.

Bauderk said investigators found no signs of forcible entry and no signs that intruders had taken anything from the house. They found $150, which they speculated may have been graduation gifts, in Jeffrey's pockets, and $200 elsewhere in the modest home.

The fire, which was confined to the basement, apparently was set by using two large candles with oil-soaked rag fuses, investigators said.

Coroner's investigators said an eight-inch kitchen knife found near Mrs. Fuchs' body apparently was used to stab her and a clothesline used to truss the bodies of the mother and her younger son had been used to strangle them.

POLICE STILL searched for the gun — believed to have been a .22-caliber weapon — used to kill the father and daughter.

Police have found a .22 rifle in the basement of the house, but investigators are still uncertain if it is the murder weapon. No member of the family was issued a gun-owner's card under the state gun laws. The basement of the home is still covered with water from firefighting efforts and detectives are using screens through which they are sifting material from the floor in search of evidence.

Bauderk said reports that Jeffrey had been in a poor mental condition were "under investigation." He refused to elaborate, but said: "There is nothing in the family background that would indicate something like this would happen."

FUCHS WAS employed by the Pan-matic Co., in Elk Grove Village while his wife worked as a clerk at Maine East. The two other children were also students at the school.

Neighbors described the family as easygoing and frequently doing things together.

Hundreds of curious residents lined the streets Monday in the otherwise quiet, middle-class residential area. Some on-lookers remained congregating in the vicinity several hours after the tragedy was first discovered late Monday morning.

Judge says Hart not proven guilty

After two days of testimony, U.S. District Court Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz told federal prosecutors they have not yet conclusively proved that former Wheeling Trustee William Hart is guilty of conspiracy to commit extortion. Marovitz made the unusual comments from the bench to two federal attorneys following testimony by Bernard Wasmer and cross-examination of the witness. The trial continues today.

Auto chase brings confusion

A high-speed auto chase that resulted in a Hoffman Estates policeman firing two warning shots and another shot at a fleeing driver occurred late Monday night. Police later placed 11 charges against an 18-year-old youth, including speeding, eluding police, leaving the scene of an accident and driving without a license. During the confused chase, the driver at one point made a 180-degree turn and then crashed into the pursuing police car.

... 'Opt-out' bill refused

The Senate refused a bill sponsored by Sen. David J. Regner, R-Mount Prospect, which would have allowed any of the six counties in the Regional Transit Authority to "opt out" of the authority by a vote of their county board. Passed, however, was a secondary measure which would remove the RTA's power to acquire park lands and similar property by eminent domain proceedings.

RTA to Supreme Court...

The Illinois Supreme Court will hear arguments June 26 on the Regional Transportation Authority's appeal of a Lake County injunction that prohibits the authority from carrying out its duties. Attorneys for the RTA Tuesday asked the court to hear the appeal directly, bypassing the appellate court, and asked for a schedule for filing of briefs in the case. The court granted both requests. Oral arguments will be in Springfield after briefs are filed June 24. James Munson, an attorney for the RTA, had said a direct appeal would be sought. Lake County State's Atty. Jack Hoogasian, who filed the suit challenging the constitutionality of the RTA, agreed Tuesday with the court schedule.

Tax collectors testify in suit

Township collectors continued to testify before Cook County Circuit Court Judge Donald O'Brien Tuesday in their effort to have the judge lift an injunction barring them from collecting taxes.

Collectors from Schaumburg, Hanover, Lyons, Orland, Bremen and Northfield townships said their town boards had appropriated money for their expenses and salaries, if they are allowed to resume tax collections. The collectors from Bloom and Thornton townships said no funds had been appropriated for them to resume tax collections, but resolutions setting their salaries had been passed by the town boards.

Attorney William Hart pressed collectors during cross-examination as to whether they would give up other full-time jobs they hold to do the work of collecting taxes.

Eighteen more collectors had been scheduled to testify this week, but late Tuesday afternoon, O'Brien asked the numerous lawyers in the case to try to reach an agreement and stipulate the collectors' testimony so they will not have to be heard.

Arlington Park Theater star Pamela Britton dies

Actress Pamela Britton, who had been co-starring with Don Knotts at the Arlington Park Theater in Arlington Heights, died of cancer Monday at Northwest Community Hospital.

Miss Britton, 49, had been appearing at the theater in the role of "The Mind with the Dirty Man." She was admitted to the hospital last Friday.

She appeared in a number of films, including her debut in "Anchors Aweigh" with Frank Sinatra, "Letter for Evie" and "Key to the City."

On the New York stage she appeared as Meg in "Brigadoon" and toured with the national company of "Guys and Dolls."

In Hollywood, she played the title role of "Blondie" on television and later appeared as Mrs. Brown in "My Favorite Martian."

Funeral services will be held at noon Friday at the Church of the Hills, Los Clawson blasts 'Nixon-hating partisans'

Ken Clawson, White House communications director, in a scathing attack said yesterday that "Nixon-hating partisans" were leaking slanderous innuendo about the President from the House Judiciary Committee's secret impeachment hearings and demanded the hearings be opened "to the sunshine of truth." Meanwhile, former Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst told the House committee the White House did not try to influence his handling of the original Watergate investigation.

Allen continues to thwart tax reform

Sen. James Allen, D-Ala., continued yesterday to thwart liberal tax efforts to bring up tax reform amendments, and it appeared he would succeed in blocking immediate action on individual tax cuts and oil tax increases. Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield filed a cloture petition to halt debate on Allen's own debt ceiling amendment, setting a vote for Thursday.

Plan to buy beef, pork for schools

The administration decided yesterday to buy $100 million worth of beef and pork for school lunches to help ward off prospects of bankruptcy and economic depression among cattle and hog producers. But Congressmen and producers, led by House Speaker Carl Albert, clamored for more sweeping remedies to rescue cattlemen from a 1970s-style economic slump, stimulate wholesale cattle prices and reduce retail consumer prices.

House unit OKs individual gold holding

The House Banking Committee voted yesterday to permit individual Americans — for the first time since 1933 — to buy, own or hold gold. The action came on a 15-6 vote approving a measure to authorize U.S. contributions to the International Development Association, which is part of the World Bank.

Bill would put cost-of-living in welfare

The Illinois House Appropriations Committee yesterday approved a bill which would give welfare recipients a 10 per cent "cost-of-living" increase in their welfare checks at an annual cost of $94 million. The bill cleared the committee on a vote of 18-3 after a parade of witnesses testified that a 25 per cent hike in benefits really is needed.

No leads in downstate girl's death

Acting Cabondale Police Chief Edward Hogan said yesterday that authorities had no leads in the nature trail knife slaying of a 13-year-old girl who had been reported missing last Thursday. The body of Paulette McDonough bore multiple stab wounds. Her clothing was missing from the waist up and Hogan said it has not been determined if she had been raped. Hogan added: "we have no suspects."

Call on Hanoi to stop Viet fighting

The United States, in an unusually strong attack on North Vietnam called on Hanoi yesterday to follow the example of the Middle East and stop the fighting. The call, in a seven-page statement by the U.S. embassy in Saigon, was issued minutes after North Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegates walked out of two separate meetings yesterday morning on the cease-fire and the search for 1,100 American servicemen missing in action.

Gather for Law of the Sea conference

Delegations from 151 nations began gathering in Caracas, Venezuela yesterday for what has been described as the largest international meeting in history — the third United Nations Conference on the Law of the Sea. The Venezuelan government, with partial support of the U. N. has invested $20 million in preparation for the meet, which is the third attempt since 1958 to harmonize centuries-old sea laws with recent demand for increased individual national control over sea resources.

Israeli warplanes strike in Lebanon

From United Press International
Israel said its warplanes made day and night attacks against Arab guerrilla bases in southern Lebanon Tuesday as President Nixon headed homeward from his five-nation goodwill tour of the Middle East.

The military command in Tel Aviv said the planes first attacked targets in "fatahland" intermittently for a half hour in midafternoon, then returned to Lebanese skies after dark in another 10-minute assault against guerrilla camps.

The raids were the first by Israel since May 31, when the Israeli-Syrian cease-fire went into effect on the Golan Heights.

They came even as Israeli troops ended the second phase of the military disengagement agreement by pulling farther back from the bulge captured in the October war.

In the first attack, the warplanes penetrated as far as 13 miles north of the Lebanese frontier to strike at five separate guerrilla bases, the Tel Aviv command said.

The night raiders hit in the vicinity of Hraibe village about seven miles north of the frontier, a military spokesman said. He said the aircraft did not attack the village.

The Israelis said all planes returned safely from the day and night strikes.

In Beirut, the Palestinian guerrilla news agency said 38 Israeli warplanes — including Phantoms, Mirages and Skyhawk fighter-bombers — took part in the raids against village areas and Palestinian guerrilla bases.

Newsmen in the region said the Israeli planes bombed and rocketed farming areas in the foothills of Mount Hermon,

Nixon wraps up pleasing trip to Middle East

LAJES AIR BASE, Azores (UPI) — A weary but smiling President Nixon, homeward bound from an eight-day Middle East tour which was grueling — but in his view successful — arrived Tuesday night for an overnight rest at this mid-Atlantic island.

The President will leave the Azores Wednesday morning and is due at Andrews Air Force base near Washington at 3 p.m. CDT. There will be no ceremony at Andrews, but he will be greeted by his cabinet and staff on the White House lawn a half-hour later.

ERA fails in Senate, or does it?

From Herald news services

The Illinois Senate Tuesday refused to vote for Illinois ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

But the chief sponsor of the resolution asking for ratification — Sen. Esther Saperstein, D-Chicago — said she regarded as a victory the 30 votes given to the measure.

The vote on the resolution was 30-24, with one senator voting present. Senate President William Harris, R-Pontiac, ruled as he has in the past that the Illinois Constitution requires a three-fifths margin for ratification of an amendment to the U.S. Constitution. That would be 36 Senate votes.

Supporters of the ERA, however, contended that only a simple majority of 30 votes is needed and have taken their case to court in an attempt to overturn Harris' ruling and a similar one by House Speaker W. Robert Blair, R-Park Forest.

"Now we can go into the courts and claim that the 30 votes were sufficient for passage," Mrs. Saperstein said after the roll call. "I think the 30 votes was a victory for the ERA."

In the House, meanwhile, persons convicted a second time of pushing hard drugs would face a mandatory life sentence under a bill passed Tuesday. Marijuana is not affected by the bill.

Rep. Richard F. Kelly Jr., D-Hazel Crest, said he recognizes the penalty would be stiff under his bill but said stern steps must be taken to combat "the drug trafficking you know is in our grade schools right now."

The bill passed, 110-34, despite strong protests from members who said the sentence would permit no judicial flexibility. Several legislators said life imprisonment for young offenders is particularly distasteful to them.

"If you vote for this," said Rep. Harry Yourell, D-Oak Lawn, "you don't believe in rehabilitation. Conditions in our prisons can only make our children worse and worse and worse."

Rep. Brian Duff, R-Willmette, said the Kelly bill may be unconstitutional because the state charter says sentences must take the possibility of rehabilitation into account. "I'm not sure this bill does," he said.

Others, however, said the drug problem is so pervasive a drastic approach is justified.

Nixon campaign funding hit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Concluding that President Nixon's 1972 campaign "spanned the entire spectrum of corrupt campaign financing," a Senate Watergate committee staff report said Tuesday some contributions were tinged with extortion and bribery.

The 41-page report said there was evidence of illegal corporate contributions, huge cash contributions which were "legal and illegal," and unlawful donations by foreign nationals.

The report, approved by Chairman Sam J. Ervin Jr., was sent to other members of the committee Tuesday for their consideration for a final report.

The report included a conclusion of the findings of an investigation into campaign spending and recommendations to restrict future abuses. A report detailing specific violations of the campaign spending laws was expected by the end of the week, according to committee sources.

"The abuses uncovered in connection with the 1972 presidential campaign spanned virtually the entire spectrum of corrupt campaign financing practices," the report said. "Some solicitations were tinged with extortion and some contributions were tinged with bribery."

A federal grand jury in Washington is still investigating abuses in Nixon's campaign financing. This week, Herbert W. Kalmbach, Nixon's former personal lawyer, was sentenced to 6 to 18 months in jail and fined $10,000 for violating campaign laws in relation to his fund raising.

In addition, a total of 12 executives and 10 corporations have pleaded guilty to making illegal corporate contributions. Charges are pending against others.

The report contained a number of recommendations for legislation to cut campaign financing abuses. Included were proposals to limit cash contributions to $100, put a ceiling on expenditures for presidential campaigns, and limit total contributions from a single individual to $3,000 and from a group to $6,000.

The report made no recommendation on the public financing of campaigns, noting the committee was sharply divided on the issue.

New hearings on Kissinger wiretap role

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimously Tuesday to reopen hearings into Henry A. Kissinger's role in 1969-70 "national security" wiretaps of newsmen and government officials.

Committee Chairman J. William Fulbright, D-Ark., announcing the committee's vote taken in closed session, said he considered it imperative to determine whether Kissinger told the "full truth" when he testified during confirmation hearings last year that he acquiesced in the eavesdropping and furnished names of those to be tapped, but did not order any such action.

Fulbright said the committee also agreed to ask the Justice Department for any materials that might be pertinent to the investigation. He said he expected the secretary of state to appear on his own behalf, but did not believe the matter could be cleared up before Kissinger flies to Moscow next Tuesday.

Kissinger helps solve U.S.-France NATO spat

OTTAWA (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger solved another international diplomatic problem Tuesday, allowing France and the United States to settle their conflict over consultation and economic co-operation among NATO countries.

A French spokesman said a brief post-dinner meeting between Kissinger and French Foreign Minister Jean Sauvagnargues resulted in the U.S. presentation of an amended declaration acceptable to the French.

The agreement in closed session to the U.S. amendment removed the last obstacle to signing of a new NATO Declaration of Principles, to be officially released Wednesday.

The spokesman said the matter of consultation had been resolved by eliminating a statement that NATO members "undertake" to consult each other on matters of political and strategic importance and its replacement by a phrase which was not legally binding.

The French had objected to any declaration which would compel them to consult with NATO allies, although they approved of having the freedom to do so.

On economic issues, the French also succeeded in blocking a U.S. effort to call for closer economic cooperation among NATO members. Such a statement would have been useful in permitting the U.S. to develop closer economic ties with the European Economic Community through NATO.

Russia's Marshal Zhukov is dead at 77

• The man called the "Eisenhower of Russia" for his role in commanding Soviet armies in World War II — Marshal Georgi S. Zhukov — is dead at age 77. Zhukov, who suffered a severe stroke in 1969, had a roller coaster career because of official Soviet gyrations. Commander of official Soviet garrisons. Commander of Berlin in 1945, he was demoted to the military backwater by an envious Josef Stalin, was restored to great power as Nikita Khrushchev's defense minister, was discredited again, and only recently had his military image again rehabilitated. An outspoken admirer and friend of former general and President Dwight Eisenhower, he won mutual admiration and Eisenhower's declaration that to no one did the allies owe a greater debt during World War II.

At least one couple overcome by fumes

by JERRY THOMAS

During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 53, and his wife, Verna, 59, of 20 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a serviceman Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors checked furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Rettenbacher, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Rettenbacher said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records, that showed over 100 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Rettenbacher.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zettek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zettek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 6,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOMES WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Keswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

George Fiedler of Johnson Corp. said that in most cases, furnace parts have not been defective. He blamed the leaks on poor ventilation due to improper installation of the furnaces.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

"We are working on it in earnest and have the Centex builders and Johnson Furnace Co.'s full cooperation," said Zettek. "When the homes in question were built, they were inspected by the FHA and so legally, I suppose, they are not our responsibility. But we have put ourselves in the position of attempting to help and resolve the problem," Zettek said.

THOMPSON SAID he had no idea until now that there was a widespread problem of defective furnaces in the community.

"Today, I can talk about it with some knowledge but that night I had no inkling and if not for the fact that my wife was restless and could not sleep, we might both be dead," said Thompson.

"That night I felt fine but tired and went to bed early and my wife, who had complained of feeling bad, stayed up sitting in bed," he said.

"She woke me and complained of feeling extremely ill. I got up, found my way to the bathroom for some water and on the way back began feeling sick myself," said Thompson.

"Now I know why. The fumes were high in the room and when I was in bed lying down, I was not breathing as much of them as Verna."

When his wife said she was unable to swallow the water, Johnson recalled, he knew something was seriously wrong and made an emergency call to the village fire department.

"I remember opening the door to the firemen and the minute one fireman walked in he said, 'I think I know what the problem is' and he walked straight to the furnace room," said Thompson.

"He told us later he had just bought a home in the village and found his heat exchanger was corroded exactly like ours was."

"I couldn't believe it and still don't understand how the previous inspection didn't show that or how the people who lived in the house before us could have lived there without incident," said Thompson.

THE COUPLE, who is childless, do not believe they have suffered any permanent damage from the fumes. Thompson said Johnson Furnace Co. provided a replacement heat exchanger at no charge and he only had to pay for the installation. Johnson has since ended its free replacement policy, blaming the problem on bad installations.

One village official who has been aware of the problem is Trustee Ronald Chernick, 225 Brighton Rd. During a seasonal check at his home in the fall of 1973, a serviceman discovered a crack in the furnace heat exchanger.

The serviceman told him the furnace should be replaced, Chernick said. "I was worried they were trying to pull a fast one on me. I called another local repairman Wing and Rettenbacher to make another inspection," he said.

Wing and Rettenbacher verified that the heat exchanger was cracked and said it should be replaced, said Chernick. He complained to Centex but decided to have Wing replace the exchanger.

Chernick said he had been unaware of the widespread nature of the furnace problem in Elk Grove Village.

"In fact, when I had the repair work done I told the rest of the trustees about it and that's when about we really got wound up in the investigation," he said.

Chernick said he did not make the information public "so as not to alarm people until we found out exactly where the responsibility lies."

VILLAGE OFFICIALS, who expect results of a consultant's study on the problem in about three weeks, have offered free checks of heating systems by village inspectors.

Arlington agrees to sell municipal bonds for hospital

The Arlington Heights Village Board has agreed to lend its name to Northwest Community Hospital for the purpose of selling tax-exempt municipal revenue bonds.

Village trustees received assurance from two legal and financial experts Monday night that the plan to sell revenue bonds to refinance past hospital debts and buy new equipment would have absolutely no impact on Arlington Heights' tax rate, bonding power or liability.

The bonds would be paid for exclusively by operating revenue from the hospital. But because they are municipal bonds and thereby tax-exempt, they carry a 2 to 2.5 per cent lower interest rate than conventional bonds.

THE DIFFERENCE will save the hospital nearly $250,000 a year on an $18 million loan.

Dave Williams, an attorney with Chapman and Cutler bond lawyers in Chicago, said the proposed bond sale represented no obligation to the Village of Arlington Heights and would not affect either the village's debt incurring powers or taxes.

Under the ordinance passed Monday night, the village would take over technical ownership of the hospital for the life of the bond issue, probably 20 years.

But the agreement specifically holds the village harmless in any lawsuits filed against the hospital, Williams said, and the hospital will be required to carry enough insurance to cover all claims against it.

The ordinance does not actually sell the revenue bonds, but puts the village in a legal position where they can be sold in the future, according to Arlington Heights Village Atty. Jack M. Siegel. Besides Northwest Community Hospital, it authorizes village bond sales for any other hospital or nursing home, he said.

MUNICIPAL BOND financing for the hospital is possible because of Arlington Heights' home-rule powers. The practice has been upheld by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Even if the hospital were for some reason unable to pay off the bonds, the debt would not be transferred to the village, Williams said.

"A default would not be a default against the Village of Arlington Heights and would have no effect on the village," he said.

A financial adviser to Northwest Community Hospital from Smith Barney and Co., a Chicago bond house, said issuing the revenue bonds would not impair any other bonds the village might want to sell.

Psychiatric treatment for 2 in obscenity case

Two unincorporated Wheeling Township residents, charged last March in an alleged pornography-prostitution ring, Tuesday were ordered to see a court psychiatrist. The hearing on the charges against the pair also was continued to July 16 in the Niles branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

Robert Boyer, 49, of 1210 Boxwood Dr., was charged with obscenity, indecent solicitation of a child and failure to buy a Chicago business license for his photo studio after police said they found more than a half-million photographs of nudes and sexual acts in his apartment.

Shortly after, Jack Klesert, 47, of 16 E. Willow Rd., was arrested and charged with obscenity, being a keeper of a house of prostitution and felony pandering.

Police said five witnesses were available in court Tuesday. Subsequent to the initial charges, Boyer was charged with one count of contributing to the delinquency of a minor and Klesert was charged with two counts of the same crime, police said.

Assistant State's Atty. Paul Perry, assigned to the case, Tuesday said only a small percentage of the hundreds of thousands of pictures were actually "obscene." Many he said merely showed nudes. Of the obscene pictures, Perry said only about 30 involved juveniles.

Some half dozen children have been identified by police, Perry said. It is believed the father of a Wheeling boy and the father of a Mount Prospect girl are among those who signed the complaints for contributing to the delinquency of minors. Names of those filing complaints are being withheld to insure their anonymity, Perry said.

Boyer is free on $3,000 bond and Klesert is free on $2,500 bond.

FAA tells safety standards for hang-gliding sport

Suggested safety standards for the fast-growing sport of hang-gliding, or sky-sailing, are being published by the Federal Aviation Administration.

FAA Administrator Alexander Butterfield said he hopes the new guidelines will be used by hang-gliding groups and that regulatory action will be unnecessary. He said the FAA will continue to monitor the growth and safety status of the sport to determine what steps might be needed to protect participants.

The FAA advisory circular on hang-gliding suggests that altitude be limited to 500 feet above the ground; that clouds be avoided, and that hang-gliders be kept at least 100 feet away from buildings, populated places or groups of people, without flying over them. The FAA also said there is to be no flying within controlled airspace, such as around airports, and no flying over prohibited and restricted areas without prior permission.

Hang-gliding manufacturers are also urged to develop criteria for materials and construction and to use quality control practices. Hang-gliding clubs are urged to establish training and safety programs and to coordinate activities with FAA officials.

Copies of the FAA circular, "Recommended Safety Parameters for Operation of Hang Gliders," will be available next month at the FAA field office at DuPage County Airport.

Pupils' gift to help rebuild WHS library

The eighth-grade graduating class of London Junior High School, Wheeling, is doing its share to help rebuild the Wheeling High School library that was destroyed two weeks ago by fire.

The students donated $100 to the local high school as their "class gift" in promotion ceremonies last Friday night.

London principal Jerry Kiffel said the pupils raised the money through various student council activities during the school year.

Minibike arrests planned by police

Buffalo Grove police plan to start arresting persons riding minibikes on private property along Lake-Cook Road.

The village has had complaints from neighbors that the bikes are noisy and are a safety hazard. Police in the past have been unable to arrest minibike riders because they were riding on private property and the owners of the land had not posted no-trespassing signs.

The village, however, has received verbal permission from the owners to post signs on the property. As soon as the village gets written permission, the signs will be posted and police will begin enforcing the no-trespassing law.

Supervision given for May 17 explosion

A 17-year-old Buffalo Grove youth, charged with criminal damage to property in a May 17 locker explosion at Buffalo Grove High School, was placed on a year's supervision Tuesday in the Arlington Heights branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

The youth, Tim Mastandrea, 114 Golfview Terr., was arrested the same day as the firecracker blast, which caused an estimated $300 damage. The explosion occurred about 8:15 a.m. when the school was almost empty, and no one was hurt.

Three lockers in Building C of the Dundee-Arlington Heights roads campus were damaged. The lockers were in the second-floor general locker area.

Girl Scout Cadette Troop 142 will sponsor a garage sale June 20-22 from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. in the 1040 block of Cambridge Drive, Buffalo Grove.

The sale will be conducted in homes with addresses ranging from 1040-1070 Cambridge Dr. and will feature a variety of items including furniture, clothing, bicycles, toys and baby items.

Proceeds from the sale will be used by the troop to finance a five-day trip to Washington, D.C., in August.

3 Girl Scouts earn first class award

Man, 19, gets 1 year in auto-theft case

A 19-year-old Chicago man, Gary L. Champion, charged with the Oct. 20, 1973 theft of an automobile in Wheeling, was sentenced to one year in prison Tuesday in the Arlington Heights branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

A spokesman for the court said Champion's sentence would run concurrent with another prison term Champion is serving in the Joliet State Prison.

The car, stolen Oct. 20, was owned by Calvin J. Mora, 333 Highland Ave.

Tax increases to be avoided

Fire department cutbacks will help build new station

Several project cutbacks have been initiated by the Buffalo Grove Fire Department so that the new Dundee Road fire station may be built without a tax increase for residents of the Wheeling Township Rural Fire Protection District.

The most immediate cutback is the firemen's "sleeper" duty will not be expanded to every day of the week as had been planned. The program, in which some firemen are at the fire station all night long so that they can respond to emergency calls faster, currently operates Sunday through Thursday nights each week.

Expansion of the program may occur next year, Chief Wayne Winter said. Also to be delayed at least a year is the department's plan to buy a used tanker. Of the tanker, Winter said, "It would have been nice to have but we can put it off for a while."

He added the tanker is not considered a necessity.

Delivery of the department's new fire engine, now scheduled for November, also is to be delayed as long as possible. Finally, only personal equipment — jackets and the like — that is "absolute necessary" will be purchased this year.

THE REASON FOR the cutbacks is the $32,000 the fire department has to spend this year for the purchase of the property on which the new station will be built. That money will come from the tax monies received this year from the township fire protection district. As in future years, the estimated $412,000 for the station itself will come from future tax receipts.

Winter said every effort is being made to build the station without an increase in taxes.

Groundbreaking for the new station on Dundee Road west of the Kingswood United Methodist Church took place last Saturday. The station's final plans will be heard tonight by the village's plan commission and then will probably be voted on Monday by the village board.

The station construction should start as soon as the current cement truckdrivers' strike ends and materials can be brought in, Winter said. Completion is scheduled for February or March next year.

'Top cops'

Opinion survey shows only 1 of 21 returned questionnaires gives department bad rating

The Buffalo Grove Police Department apparently has a very good image with the residents it serves.

Police Chief Harry Walsh Tuesday said that of the 21 questionnaires returned so far in an opinion survey of residents' reactions to the police department, only one has been somewhat critical. In all, 50 questionnaires were mailed out about 10 days ago to people who had called the department for assistance.

Walsh said the one woman's complaint was that it took the policeman 20 minutes to respond to her call. Actually, Walsh said, the policeman in that instance was on the scene in about a minute but had dealt with the situation before talking with the woman complainant.

The policeman should have talked with the woman first, Walsh said.

WALSH SAID HE was very pleased with the results. This was the department's first such attempt to measure public opinion of its efficiency and image.

Other than the one woman, all who responded said service was prompt and efficient. Walsh said all who answered felt the police were neat in appearance and courteous. Several people, Walsh said indicated their contact with the police had enhanced their attitudes toward the police department.

As the first of the 50 questionnaires went out June 7, Walsh said, "any constructive criticism will be seriously considered. I really think some citizen input is possible." He said the survey was a means to find out areas in which the department could improve and to show "we really care about people."

The 50 residents were chosen at random and were involved in 50 consecutive calls for assistance received by the police department.

Teen seized by police after chase, collision

A Hoffman Estates patrolman fired two warning shots and another gunshot late Monday night after a vehicle rammed his squad car during a brief car chase and escaped. An 18-year-old youth later was arrested on 11 charges.

Donald Kotel, 106 Geronimo St., Hoffman Estates, was charged with four counts of disobeying a stop sign and one each of reckless conduct, fleeing or eluding a police officer, speeding, inadequate exhaust, leaving the scene of a personal injury accident, damage to village property and having no driver's license on his person.

The car chase began at about 10:53 p.m. near the intersection of Kingman Lane and Morton Street after a car was detected speeding, police said. The suspect vehicle collided with the squad car near the intersection of Flagstaff Lane and Washington Boulevard, about five blocks from where the pursuit began.

KOTEL WAS arrested at about 1 a.m. Tuesday after he went to the police station to report his auto stolen, authorities reported. The policeman, Richard Ricker, identified Kotel as the person involved in the chase after Ricker returned from Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, where he received treatment for a bump on the head, Police said.

Ricker clocked a car doing about 50 m.p.h. in a 20-m.p.h. zone on Kingman Lane. The suspect car failed to stop and continued west on Kingman Lane, and Ricker gave chase with his squad car emergency lights and siren going, authorities said.

The pursuit continued north on Washington Boulevard and then east on Flagstaff Lane. The suspect car then made a 180-degree turn in the road and headed at Ricker's squad car, police said. The two vehicles collided, but Ricker averted a head-on crash by turning his vehicle, authorities said.

After the impact, the suspect vehicle went on a parkway and nearby lawn and then continued south on Washington Boulevard, police reported.

RICKER FIRED TWO warning shots in the air and then one at the fleeing vehicle, police said. It was unknown where the third shot landed. The suspect car was found abandoned at the intersection of Washington Boulevard and Pleasant Street.

Damage to both cars was estimated at more than $100 each. The right front fender and radiator on the squad car were damaged.

Kotel was released after posting $1,000 bond. He is scheduled to appear Aug. 2 in the Hoffman Estates branch of the Cook County Circuit Court.

Would serve 4 townships

Alcoholism center funding requested

by DIANE STEFANOS

Federal revenue-sharing funds from four local townships will be requested to establish an area alcoholism outpatient center.

Roger Boekenbauer, a counselor for Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois, has been studying the disease in Elk Grove, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships for six months. He said he has found "many people in the suburbs with alcohol-related problems that need counseling and treatment."

Boekenbauer's proposed center would be operated by the Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois which has offered a similar alcoholic-drug dependence program at three Chicago centers during the past six years.

The organization is a nonprofit social services group that offers day care and care for the elderly and mentally retarded throughout the country. Although the organization is affiliated with the Lutheran churches of America, the alcoholism program is not.

BOEKENBAUER PLANS to request $15,000 in revenue sharing funds from each of the four townships for the funding of the program and center. The Elk Grove Township board is expected to consider the request for funds at its June 27 meeting. Other townships' mental health committees are still in the process of reviewing the program proposal.

Larry Walker, director of youth services for Schaumburg township said that he feels that there is a "definite" need for such an alcohol center in the Schaumburg area.

"In working with young people, I see the need for a service that just isn't available in our township," he said.

Walker considers the qualifications of Boekenbauer and other Lutheran Welfare Service staff members working with alcoholism to be "more than adequate."

Wheeling library to get new name

The Wheeling Public Library District will be known as the Indian Trails Public Library District, starting July 1.

The name change is scheduled to go into effect with the beginning of the 1974-75 fiscal year, said Kenneth Swanson, head librarian.

Swanson said the library board voted to rename the district to eliminate the geographical identification with Wheeling because the district also serves Buffalo Grove.

BOEKENBAUER HOPES that township funds can be made available this summer so that the center can open in September. Boekenbauer has been conducting a preliminary alcoholic program in the four-township area since January to prove to township board members that there is a need for such services.

Patient fees, contributions and township funds would serve as the financial base for the proposed central outpatient clinic. These funds would be used to pay for staff salaries, rental space, utilities and printed materials, he said.

The proposed central clinic would have four staff members to serve all four townships. Boekenbauer said a location for the clinic will be selected and services will begin as soon as township funds are available.

School budget impact on taxes questioned

The 1972 and 1973 tax levies in the district were $2.80 per $100 assessed valuation.

THE TENTATIVE budget, which reflects a substantial increase over last year's $2.2 million budget, includes several areas of increase. Included in the increases are a 9 per cent hike in administrative expenditures due primarily to salary increases; a 17 per cent increase in the instructional account due to teacher salary hikes, additional library material and additional staff; an increase of $4,575 in the amount for in-service training; an increase of $7,175 for new library books; an increase in the nurses budget due to hiring of an added staff member; an increase in custodial services of $10,000; an increase of $10,000 for the purchase of new textbooks; an increase of $3,000 in cafeteria salaries; a $3,600 increase in food supplies due to commodity price hikes; and a possible insurance rate increase accounting for an added $5,500.

The board is expected to approve a resolution at its meeting tonight calling for posting of the budget for 30 days as required by law. After the document is posted and a public hearing held, the board will take final action.

Hendren speculated that final approval will come by the end of July but revisions and updating still may be made after the board's final action.

Suspected cat burglar sighted, scared away

A person suspected of being the cat burglar for whom Elk Grove Village police are searching was spotted and scared away early Tuesday morning.

Lawrence Needham, 350 Tonne Rd., told police he was awakened by a noise to find a man kneeling at the foot of his bed. Needham said he watched the burglar for a moment and then jumped out of bed.

The burglar, realizing he had been discovered, bolted from the room and out the front door of the apartment, taking Needham's wallet with him.

Police Lt. William Kohnke said this is the first time the cat burglar had been spotted. There have been 15 reported burglaries and burglary attempts in this wave of cat burglaries.

The only description of the burglar given by Needham, who called police at 4:45 a.m. to report the incident, was that he had dark hair. Needham said his wallet contained $160 in cash and some credit cards.

Police said they believed the burglar entered the third-floor apartment through an open patio door off a balcony.

This is the second time the Eagles on Tonne apartment complex has been hit by burglars. Three other incidents were reported during the weekend.

Entry to the other apartments also were made through open patio doors. Kohnke told apartment dwellers to keep doors and windows locked and not be lulled into a false sense of security because the apartments are not on ground floors. He urged all residents to keep outside lights on, be alert and call the police at 439-3900 to report any suspicious actions.

Library planning summer program

The Wheeling Public Library District is again planning to operate a summer program for children and adults in Buffalo Grove.

For the second straight year, a branch library will be set up at St. Mary's School beginning July 9. The library will be open from 12:30 to 4:30 p.m. each Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

Policy statements before school board

The Dist. 23 Board of Education will consider several proposed new and amended policy statements at a meeting today at 7:30 p.m. at the administration office, Palatine and Schoenbeck roads, Prospect Heights.

Included in the proposed changes are provisions to reimburse the partial cost of medical exams required for new teachers; partial reimbursement for travel expenses; a policy to allow students who do not meet minimum educational standards for receipt of a diploma to receive a certificate of attendance so they may enter ninth grade; a policy to withhold a student's report card for his failure to pay for lost or damaged school property, and a job description for the school nurse.

A summer reading club for children in kindergarten through the sixth grade is planned that also will include story hours.

Also scheduled are craft classes, puppet shows and sports days featuring games and other competition for youngsters, according to Kenneth Swanson, Wheeling head librarian.

Swanson said the number of offerings for adults at the branch library will be substantially increased from the amount of materials available last summer.

Besides a selection of adult books, Swanson said there will be a "Consumer's Corner" collection of digests and product rating manuals and information on gas-saving short vacations.

Buffalo Grove residents will be able to use the branch facility at no cost.

Welding gear stolen

Some $386 in welding equipment was stolen last week from the Trans-Clean factory, 467 N. Wolf Rd., Wheeling.

Police said the burglary, which occurred sometime Wednesday through Friday, was reported Monday. Police said they could find no signs of forced entry to the building. The equipment consisted of tanks, hoses and valves.

Buffalo Grove agrees to sell 9.7 acres park district

After a heated discussion, Buffalo Grove officials agreed to sell the park district 9.7 acres of unimproved land adjacent to Willow Stream Park.

The village board approved the sale Monday night, but only after defeating three previous motions. The park district last week voted to pay the village about $54,000 for the property.

The original motion to approve the sale was defeated when it failed to get a second. The board then defeated a motion that called for the village to refund about $45,000 that the park district already had paid to the village. Before returning to the original motion to approve the sale, the board defeated another motion which asked that the matter be tabled.

SEVERAL BOARD members reconsidered their position after Trustee James Shirley pointed out that the village had committed itself to selling the land to the park district last October. "The fact of the matter is the majority of the board indicated it would sell the property to the park district," Shirley told the board.

Following Shirley's remarks, Trustee Clarence Rech said, "I think the village has committed itself. I remember the discussion. I think the village should follow through with this sale because it led the park district to believe it would sell them the property."

The board then approved the sale by a 3-to-2 vote. Trustees Thomas Mahoney, who made the original motion, joined Mrs. Rech and Shirley in approving the sale. Trustees Randall Rathjen and Edward Osmon opposed the move.

IN VOTING AGAINST the sale, Osmon said, "I'd like to see the village keep this property. The village has need of additional land and I would like this tabled until it is determined whether we need this land."

Osmon was one of five board members polled last Oct. 15 that favored selling the land to the park district. Rathjen has opposed the sale all along.

Osmon said he was reluctant to approve the sale because he fears the park district will be unable to maintain the property. "They've (park district) said they don't have the money to take care of other property they now have," he said. "If we (village) give them this, it might be something else they won't be able to take care of."

PARK DISTRICT officials recently said there are no funds for further park development and will need another referendum to raise additional money. Park Board Pres. Joseph Settanni said last week the land adjacent to Willow Stream Park will remain unimproved until money is available.

Following Osmon's remarks, Shirley said he did not feel it was the village's responsibility to concern itself with what the park would do with the land. "That is within the realm of the park district's responsibility," he said. "The question the board should be concerned with is whether we want to sell them the property."

In approving the sale, the board directed the village attorney to prepare an ordinance transferring the property to the park district. The ordinance probably will be considered within the next several weeks.

$81,000 for impoverished youth

Suburbs to get grant for summer jobs

by KAREN BLECHIA
Northwest suburban agencies will receive more than $81,000 in federal funds this summer to provide jobs for 170 impoverished youths who live in the area.
The money is part of a $307,000 grant approved by the U. S. Department of Labor for 2,000 jobs in the 1974 Summer Program for Youth in Suburban Cook County. Funds are being distributed by the county to 31 municipal agencies and the Cook County Office of Economic Opportunity.
Joseph Monaghan, manpower director for the county, said Tuesday his office expects additional funds to be channeled into the program but doesn't know how much. This is the first time the county is in charge of disbursing all federal anti-poverty summer jobs funds, he said.
SPONSORS OF THE work programs in the Northwest suburbs are High School Dist. 214, the Northwest Opportunity Center in Rolling Meadows, and the municipalities of Elk Grove Village, Wheeling, Buffalo Grove, Barrington and Elk Grove Village.

Youths who qualify will be placed in jobs with these sponsors or with organizations in the area. They will earn the new minimum wage of $2 an hour, paid out of federal funds, for not more than 26 hours a week for 12 weeks, Monaghan said.
High School Dist. 214 is the largest sponsor in the area with 87 jobs and a grant of $42,200. Other distribution is as follows: the opportunity centers 60 jobs and $25,980; Wheeling, eight jobs and $4,465; Rolling Meadows and Barrington, five jobs and $2,791 each; Buffalo Grove, three jobs and $1,874 and Elk Grove Village, two jobs and $1,116.
TO QUALIFY, a youth must be 14 to 21 old, live in the area and be within set income limits. Yearly limits are, for example $4,550 for a family of four, $5,290 for a family of five and $6,030 for a family of six. Those receiving public aid or aid to dependent children are automatically eligible.
To apply, two forms attesting to income must be completed. Parents of those under 21 years old must sign both forms. The local office is responsible for getting the forms signed and the county makes no income checks, Monaghan said.

"You can get too involved with that," he said. "We place the obligation on the parents' shoulders. They sign under oath."
While eligibility requirements are the same, the programs vary with each sponsor. In Dist. 214, participants are paid $2 an hour to work, while at NOC participants are paid to work as well as go to summer school.
GEORGE THEODORE, administrator of the nine-year-old Dist. 214 program, said participants can work a maximum of 234 hours. He said he has placed youths in park districts, high schools, junior high schools, libraries, the Illinois State Employment Service and the Glenview Naval Air Station.
Dist. 214's program, which started Monday, covers the geographical area served by the district.

NOC's program, new this year, will take in the areas Dist. 214 does not said Bruce Newton, NOC director. Under NOC's program, those eligible are paid to work 20 hours a week for 10 weeks or work 10 hours and go to summer school 10 hours each week. Participants must be in school, recently graduated or interested in returning to school, he said.
"The main emphasis of our program is to encourage kids to continue their education or to resume their education," Newton said.
Anyone interested in applying for the work programs can contact Theodore at 537-2753 between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday or Theresa Albini at the center at 255-3456.

Senate, Gov. Walker now stand in way

House approves school bus-safety bills

SPRINGFIELD (UPI) — The Illinois House approved a series of bills that would force the state's school districts and private schools to make safety improvements in their school buses.
The bills also provide nearly $2 million to pay for padding seat backs, adding additional flashing lights and training drivers for existing buses.
The measures, sponsored by State Rep. Susan Catania, R-Chicago, and approved Monday on a roll call of 133-1, would take effect July 1, 1975, if they pass the Senate and are signed into law by Gov. Daniel Walker.

Mrs. Catania said part of the cost of the alterations may be picked up by the federal government.
The House beat back an amendment which would also have required installation of seat belts on school buses.
The Senate, meanwhile, moved to passage stage most of the budget bills for the state's public colleges and universities.
Those budgets now include an 8 per cent pay raise for University of Illinois employees and a 5 per cent raise for all others — a provision tacked onto the bills in a Senate committee.

The House is expected to look with disfavor on the difference in pay hikes if the bills pass the Senate in that form.
The bills ready for final Senate action include $246 million for the U of I; $102 million for the Board of Governors, and $115 million for the Junior College Board.

Private pilots offered FAA safety program

The Federal Aviation Administration has begun a month-long safety program aimed at the aviators with the worst accident record — private pilots who fly on weekends and evenings.
The program is directed toward improving communications with general aviation private pilots, mechanics and airport operators, according to John M. Cyrocki, FAA Great Lakes regional director.
Pilots will be given opportunities to discuss safety techniques, with accident prevention counselors, pilot-mechanic examiners, flight instructors, state aeronautics commissions and industry advisory groups. Other organizations such as the 80s (women aviators) and Civil Air Patrol are also involved.
Pilots interested in more information or assistance or who want to participate in the program may phone Don Muzze-rol, FAA accident prevention specialist at DuPage County Airport, 584-4490.

New St. Viator president leaves athletic post

A whole new game for Father Cahill

by BETTY LEE

Father Patrick Cahill, who has been St. Viator High School's athletic director for 11 years, will be thinking of a lot more than sports this fall.

He succeeds Brother Leo V. Ryan, who left the St. Viator presidency to take a national post. Officials of the Clerics of St. Viator appointed Cahill the new president in April. Father Cahill remembers he was surprised.

"It was not an ambition of mine to be president or to be principal of any school," Father Cahill said. "I enjoyed what I was doing."

IN SEPTEMBER he'll confront the mechanics of the school of some 1,100 boys who come from all over the Northwest suburbs for their four-year Catholic education.

"I've mixed emotions about it (being president)," he said while sitting in his old office. He hasn't yet moved to his new, more plush quarters. The athletic director's office is bright blue and white with pictures of former student stars and yellowing newspaper clippings of the school's past victories framed on the walls.

"I'm going from the known to the unknown," he said. "I enjoyed the satisfaction dealing with the kids and coaches, but now my job is more broad."

FATHER CAHILL, 41, graduated from Eastern Illinois University with a major in physical education. He taught at a high school in Springfield before entering the seminary. Teaching at St. Viator was his first assignment after being ordained in 1962.

In the fall of 1963 he became the athletic director and began to oversee the football, basketball and baseball teams.

The school faculty sees students come and go, but during his 11 years at St. Viator, Father Cahill believes that boys basically have been the same.

"The freedoms that kids now have makes them more expressive with their antagonisms, if they have them," he said. "You run into more antagonisms and criticism from those who have them. But most kids are happy, satisfied."

FATHER PATRICK CAHILL is the new president of St. Viator High School in Arlington Heights, succeeding Brother Leo V. Ryan. After serving 11 years as athletic director, Cahill will oversee the school that provides Catholic education for 1,100 boys.

FATHER CAHILL sees more responsibilities ahead of him, including the maintaining of the school's educational policies.

"Viator has become pretty much accepted as a fine academic school," Father Cahill said. "I don't know if I can enhance it but I hope to build on it and keep it at the caliber it has been."

"There are good relations between teachers and students. There's a lot of room for creativity on the part of the teachers."

If Father Cahill seems a little reluctant to leave his athletic post, it may be because of the close contact he has had with his students.

"I hope to keep in touch with the kids, but realistically I may not be able, time wise," he said. "This is the hardest part of being administrator. If you lose contact with your students you become a poor administrator."

OUTSIDE his duties at the school, Father Cahill devotes much of his time with the St. Viator alumni association.

He says he's easing into the president's role but his new job won't stop him from going to the gym. For the summer he will be painting and repairing the gym locker rooms. "It's therapeutic," he said.

Herald opinion

Siren cooperation needed

When you need them the most, those emergency sirens scattered around the Northwest suburbs offer only confusion.

Ten days ago, for example, a series of thunderstorms hit the Northwest suburbs — and each local community reacted differently to the foul weather and to the threat of tornados in the area.

For example, the sirens sounded in Hoffman Estates, when officials received word of a funnel cloud moving towards the area. But in neighboring Schaumburg, the sirens were silent, for each community has a different definition of when to push the siren button.

Other communities which share a common boundary, Arlington Heights and Mount Prospect, had a similar conflict. Mount Prospect sounded its sirens, as it does when a tornado warning is issued by the National Weather Service. Arlington Heights' sirens were silent, however, for that community only pushes the button if a tornado is sighted in the area.

There are strong justifications for the strategy adopted by each local community. However, for the residents of Hoffman Estates, Schaumburg, Arlington Heights or Mount Prospect, it's impossible to know whether there's a tornado in the next county or in the next subdivision.

As a result, too often the sirens are ignored by the general public — or phone lines to village halls are clogged with anxious local residents seeking more information. Confusion is created by the siren system — and when a serious tornado rips through this area in the future, the confusion could lead to the needless loss of life.

The obvious answer is for all local communities to get together and standardize their alarm systems so that, when any siren sounds in this area, we'll know precisely what kind of danger it is announcing, and how much time we have before the danger arrives in the Northwest suburbs.

Local communities, especially in the fire and civil defense areas, have shown admirable cooperation in the past in setting up mutual aid systems. It's time that the men who push the siren buttons get together, too.

'St. Clair boosts Nixon'

by CLARK R. MOLLENHOFF

WASHINGTON — Boston lawyer James St. Clair's name undoubtedly will go into the history books because of who his distinguished client is — even if history doesn't applaud the manner in which the legal defense is conducted.

If, in the end, St. Clair is able to avoid impeachment for President Richard Nixon or contempt of court for himself, his defense strategy of dodge, duck, obstruct and delay will be considered brilliant.

However, as St. Clair follows, or leads, his distinguished client through a series of "historic firsts" in law, he runs a substantial risk that goes with the constant pressure of being in the national spotlight in a great many courts as well as in sessions of the House Judiciary Committee.

Assuring himself a "place in history" must have been one of the personal motives that caused the 53-year-old St. Clair to give up a private practice reported to bring in $200,000-a-year. In exchange, he got a White House post as special counsel for the Watergate defense that pays $42,500.

St. Clair also may have gotten more than he bargained for.

St. Clair's motivation hardly could be a preconceived belief in the embattled Richard Nixon or a desire to defend the government's right to burglarize, to wiretap, to destroy records to cover its malfeasance.

By the time St. Clair came into the case, Senate Watergate Committee counsel already had made arguments in court that a strong prima facie case existed that President Nixon was involved in obstruction of justice in the Watergate cover-up.

When St. Clair's appointment was announced January 4, it is doubtful he could have visualized the multitudinous hazards he would face in defense of a president who says he is determined to "tough it out" to the end.

Initially, St. Clair reportedly has insisted upon full control of the defense strategy, a control that J. Fred Buzhardt and Leonard Garment never had in their early efforts.

Buzhardt and Garment were pushed out in front to carry on the public battle directed by President Nixon. But when things went wrong, they were left in embarrassing postures, particularly with regard to the mysterious erasures on the White House tapes.

There can be no doubt that Nixon's defense team has been upgraded by the addition of St. Clair. But there has been little in the defense so far that could be termed brilliant. And, there has been much that could be regarded as sloppy and vulnerable to being historically inaccurate.

Every utterance and every brief St. Clair files is examined critically by such legal scholars as Raoul Berger, the

Charles Warren Senior Fellow in American Legal History at Harvard and author of definitive historic studies: "Impeachment," and "Executive Privilege — A Constitutional Myth."

Berger recently termed a legal memorandum by St. Clair to the House Judiciary Committee as "nothing but 'lawyer's history,' a pastiche of selected snippets and half-truths, exhibiting a resolute disregard of adverse facts and designed to serve the best interests of a client."

The St. Clair memorandum was in support of the narrow thesis that the President cannot be impeached except for crimes. This thesis overlooks clear English precedents dealing with abuse of power, betrayal of trust and general neglect of duty.

St. Clair's primary goal must have been not to write a balanced legal history of impeachment, but rather to develop the thesis that would permit his distinguished client to have the least possibility of being impeached.

With regard to St. Clair's support of an absolute power of a president to withhold evidence of crime, it must be assumed he is interested mainly in keeping as much evidence out of the hands of the special prosecutor and the House impeachment investigators as can be withheld under any possible claim of "executive privilege."

The tactics of St. Clair or Nixon seem to be to avoid until the last moment any definitive ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court on controversial and doubtful assertions of an absolute "executive privilege."

With each succeeding move, Nixon and St. Clair have been placed in a more uncomfortable political position and in a more untenable procedural posture.

Some developments have been beyond St. Clair's control, such as the President being required to pay an additional $467,000 in back federal taxes and interest.

It is not clear whether the decision to publish the presidential transcripts was Nixon acting on advice of St. Clair or Nixon acting in opposition to the advice of St. Clair.

Perhaps getting that transcript record out with its admissions against interest and its "expletives deleted" was the best alternative Nixon had. At least, he had the opportunity to place it in the setting he desired with his own self-serving characterizations and the friendly legal observation of St. Clair.

Because of the lawyer-client relationship, it is impossible for the courts or the Congress to penetrate the relationship to determine if the time-consuming stonewalling tactics originate with St. Clair or with Nixon.

However, St. Clair wisely is taking a precaution that some of Nixon's earlier aides did not take. In his most controversial legal briefs telling of decisions to withhold documents from the court and the Congress, St. Clair is pointing out that he is doing so "at the direction" of Nixon.

Whether the actions are on the advice of St. Clair, with the advice of St. Clair or against the advice of St. Clair may never be known. But it is quite obvious that James St. Clair is the lawyer who is most in the current national spotlight.

For whom and why does which siren wail?

'Cussing is a bad habit'

Got to reading the Declaration of Independence the other day, just to see what truths our forefathers held to be self evident. Didn't count pronouns as one feller did with the Constitution. Reckon anybody who was willing to die for his convictions don't need to be judged by my 20th Century hang-ups. Anyhow, those guys are a tough act to follow. All they did was build the greatest country the world has ever seen, just them and God. I get the uncomfortable feeling a lot of folks these days would like to dissolve that partnership.

Saw where Professor Reinhold at the University of Wisconsin considers himself an expert on swearing. Now don't that beat all. I never knew swearing was a college level profession. It sure is a shame my Uncle Leroy didn't live to know that. He could cuss a team of mules 20 miles and never repeat himself and he only finished the third grade. I'll bet if he was alive today he could pick his college and be editor of the student newspaper.

Professor Reinhold also said President Nixon's cussing is "typically American," and "natural as can be." Back where I come from anything natural is produced by nature, not artificial, acquired or assumed. Cussing misses the boat on all three counts if America is a Christian country, as it is surely meant to be.

The fact that profanity just might be typically American is an indication that we have a skunk in the hen house. The cure for that is to get rid of the skunk, not try to tell the hens that they gotta learn to live with it. Cussing is a bad habit, not cultural enrichment.

Just because moral decay is socially acceptable does not justify it. History is full of the carcasses of once great nations who forgot God, who lost their anchor on truth and rationalized themselves into oblivion. As our 200th birthday rolls around, we could do our country no greater service than to seek and preserve the ideals our forefathers had. Look beyond their choice of words into their choice of priorities; God first, country second, self last. If we cannot pledge now, as they did then, "our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor," it is with supreme arrogance that we call these states "united."

Supreme Court view blasted

I read recently that the U.S. Supreme Court has refused to hear an appeal to a district court panel's decision affirming abortion in Rhode Island. In this decision the district court maintains that only the Supreme Court can define what constitutes a "person" under the Constitution, specifically the 14th Amendment. Consequently, the Rhode Island legislature was overruled in saying that a fetus becomes a "person" at the moment of conception.

The 14th Amendment reads in part "nor shall any State deprive a person of life ... without due process of law." It seems that members of our current Supreme Court have forgotten that this amendment was enacted as a result of the Civil War with the emphasis on equal protection of the law regardless of ethnicity. There is nothing in this amendment that purports to define what is a "person," unless one subscribes to the Lewis Carroll logic of Humpty Dumpty when he says, "When I use a word it means just what I choose it to mean — neither more nor less."

In defining who or what is a "person" the Supreme Court is coming perilously close to the Orwellian concept of "non-persons" and the Nazi idea of "racial anthropology" which were both designed for the "good of society" (sic). This is not to imply that there should be no concern for population control. Certainly, we must come to grips with survival on this planet someday, and the time to start is now. But the Supreme Court is only adding to the problem through vague legal language in determining a right to a woman's privacy. (Is it not an invasion of privacy to prevent a person from committing suicide?) and by several Humpty Dumpties who have fallen off the judicial wall in attempting to define the word, "person."

Seminar praised

Just a brief note to thank you and let you know how much I have appreciated the Herald's cooperation, for the past so many years, in placing all of Gamma Theta's business and social articles in the "Next-on-the-Agenda" column. Also the printing of our publicity articles and a picture for our second annual fund raising project, "Spring Thing," were most effective, and once again thank you.

As publicity chairman, I was also most appreciative in being able to attend your publicity seminar last year where I had garnered many excellent tips and ideas in handling our chapter's publicity. The local newspapers are indeed a most welcome medium for publicizing community and philanthropic projects. The seminars are a most excellent contribution to organizations' neophyte publicity chairmen in particular, and a great review and updating means for old hands.

Thank you very much for a most personally rewarding year as part of your community para-alde reporting, and may our chapter's voice continue to be heard thru your papers.

Cigaret tax hit

We read your editorial on the proposed Mount Prospect cigaret tax with great interest. Two of the points you brought out are ones we have found to be true wherever a municipal tax is imposed. Word a day

Back to normal?

Scientists: warmer weather may have been a 30-year 'phase'

MADISON, Wis. — Did the record low 52 degrees in Atlanta, or the 47 in Chattanooga, Tenn., or the 38 in Sioux Falls, S.D., or the bleak, sunless 59 in Champaign, Ill., make you think Monday was unseasonably cold?

Forget it. Dr. Reid A. Bryson of the University of Wisconsin's Institute of Environmental Studies said Monday this is the real normal. A National Weather Service meteorologist agreed, but for different reasons.

"It was warmer from 1930 to 1960 but that was very unusual if you look at the last 300 years," Bryson said. "We only think it was normal because it was all we knew. Actually it is abnormal. The colder temperatures we are having now are the real normal."

BRYSON SAID the jetstream — the strong atmospheric winds that form a jet-speed highway for the world's more extreme weather systems — has been in a winter position during spring and summer months lately, but that is without consequence.

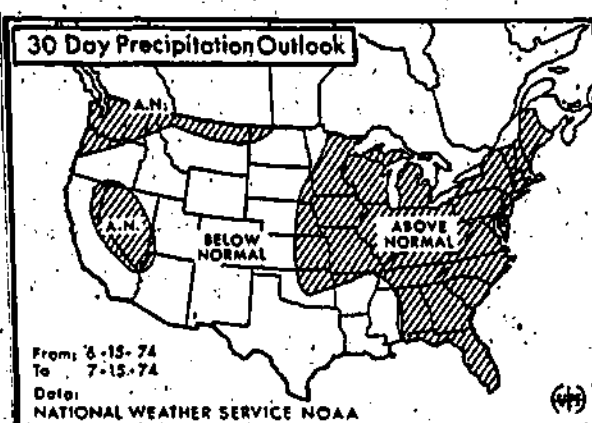

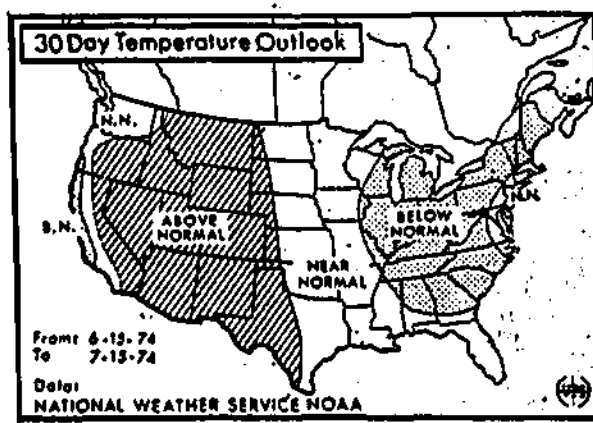

The jetstream is an indicator," Bryson said. "But to say it is the cause of the weather change is to say someone has malaria because he has a fever."

Bryson said temperatures are now back to "normal," because there have been few volcanoes in the last 40 years.

"Volcanoes put dust high in the atmosphere which cuts out sunlight. Now the temperatures are catching up with the fact there haven't been any volcanoes."

BOB SOMREK, a meteorologist for the National Weather Service in Chicago, said the weather is normal because it is the same as it has been in the last 40 years.

If anything, he said, temperatures are warmer this year than they have been in years. To date, Chicago temperatures are 30 degrees above normal for the year.

RAINY AND COLDER is the outlook according to data from the National Weather Service. Below-normal temperatures and above-normal rainfall for the Midwest are predicted.

"So far June is about 33 degrees below normal for the month," he said. "But when you divide that by 18 days, that's only 2 degrees a day. Does that sound like a trend to you?"

He said the nation could expect the same number of 70- and 80-degree days this summer as in the recent past. Bryson would have nothing of Somrek's observations.

"This is not theory but observation," Bryson said.

"But what this trend towards colder weather means spells trouble for the people in the monsoon lands. Everytime the higher latitudes have cooled off, the monsoon rains fall. That means drought in India, Pakistan, Burma — all the hungry half of the world. And the way it looks, they have trouble."

Ecological impact of 'acid rains' has experts worried

by AL ROSSITER JR.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rains more acidic than orange juice are falling over much of the Northeast and in some industrialized areas elsewhere. Scientists are worried about the ecological consequences.

Most of the acid in the precipitation is in the form of dilute sulfuric acid. It apparently comes from chemical reactions with sulfur dioxide, which flows from smokestacks from the combustion of oil and coal containing sulfur.

"The ecological effects of acid rain are as yet largely unknown, but potentially they are manifold and very complex," said Drs. Gene E. Likens of Cornell University and F. Herbert Bormann of Yale University's school of forestry and environmental studies.

WRITING IN Science magazine, they said acidic rain may affect soil nutrients, plant foliage, the acid levels of rivers and lakes and the metabolism of organisms.

Damage to buildings, structures and statues may be enormous, the report said.

Likens and Bormann said it is believed that increased acid in rains may be responsible for a reduction of forest growth in northern New England and in Scandinavia over the past two decades. They also said research with western pines shows that needles inoculated with a solution of sulfuric acid like that in rain grow only half normal size.

They said current measurements and a few scattered observations during the past 11 years show that precipitation falling in the northeastern United States is significantly more acidic than elsewhere in the country.

ACIDITY IS measured on a pH scale running from 1 to 14 with numbers on the low end being the most acid. A pH of 7 is neutral and substances of a higher pH are alkaline.

Likens and Bormann reported precipitation with an average pH of 4.03 at the Hubbard Brook Experimental Forest, N.H., 3.98 at Ithaca, N.Y., 3.91 at Aurpa, N.Y., and 4.02 at Geneva, N.Y. Rains with a pH as low as 2.1 were recorded in the Northeast in 1964.

Dr. Fredric A. Godshall, a National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) meteorologist, said a student project sponsored by the classroom newspaper "Weekly Science" showed that acid rains with a pH less than 5 also fall in industrialized regions of the South and Midwest with pockets around Tucson, Ariz. Los Angeles and Portland, Ore.

FOR COMPARISON, distilled water has a pH of 7, boric acid has a pH of 5, orange juice 4.3, vinegar 3.0 and battery acid 0.5.

Godshall said a recent study by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) showed that 80 per cent of the acidity of rain in the Northeast is the result of sulfur dioxide pollution. Nitrogen oxide from automobile exhaust also reacts with rain to form nitric acid.

Likens and Bormann said recent pollution control techniques such as increasing the height of smokestacks and the installation of particulate precipitators have reduced the amount of soot falling near factories but have increased the dispersal of sulfur dioxide into the atmosphere to cause widespread acid rain problems.

Office workers ask for recognition

by WANDALYN RICE

The school secretary is the first person a confused or irate parent talks to when he or she calls a local school.

Clerks employed by the school district keep student records straight, keep track of attendance to ensure the district receives all the state school aid per pupil to which it is entitled, and do the clerical work necessary to ensure that teachers and administrators get their pay checks on time.

The secretaries, clerks and other "non-professional" office workers in High School Dist. 214 have taken note of the services they provide the schools. Now, in what their leaders describe as a "non-militant" approach, they have asked the High School Dist. 214 Board of Education to recognize their contributions.

SPECIFICALLY, the association of Educational Supportive Personnel (ESP), which represents the 321 full-time clerical and technical employees in the district have asked that the board agree to collective bargaining. They want a contract covering salaries, fringe benefits and working conditions similar to the one the district now has with its 1,000 teachers. About half the ESP employees work only during the 10-month school year. The rest work year-round.

"We feel professional and we would like to be treated that way," Jean Garibaldi, president of the ESP, said recently in explaining the group's goals. "We've had it expressed that we are more or less housewives with spare time, but that's not true."

Mrs. Garibaldi, who is secretary to Elk Grove High School assistant principal Donald Fyfe, and ESP president-elect Eleanor Petersen, secretary to Assistant Supt. Robert Weber, explained that the ESP move got its start with the Dist. 214 board's reaction to its request for a salary increase last year.

The ESP leaders last year appeared before the board to present an alternative salary proposal to the one being recommended by Supt. Edward Gilbert. And the board's reaction made them unhappy. "It was clear from the questions that the board didn't really understand what we were asking for," Mrs. Garibaldi said.

THIS YEAR, the ESP is following the same procedure used last year in salary talks. They meet with a team of administrators and the results of the negotiations are submitted to Gilbert, who may then change them before recommending them to the board. A final bargaining session was held last week and proposals from both the administrators and the ESP are now being submitted to Gilbert.

However, the ESP officers recently appeared before the Dist. 214 board to ask for collective bargaining. In addition, they explained that some of the things they want in a contract go beyond salary.

"We would like a sick-leave bank," Mrs. Garibaldi said. "We would like to have substitutes in when we are absent for a short time, not just for long term illness. And we would like to have workshops for training. We are trying to upgrade ourselves."

Sick-leave banks now are operating for teachers and administrators in Dist. 214. A sick leave bank allows an employee to draw extra sick days after using up accumulated days.

The workshops, Mrs. Garibaldi explained, would give ESP employees the chance to meet with their counterparts from other schools to share problems and discuss ideas for improving their approaches to jobs. "Now we don't have a chance to do that," she said. "Who knows, we might be able to save the district money."

SALARIES ALSO concern the ESP. Officers have drawn up charts comparing Dist. 214 salaries to those in other school districts and also have tried to find comparison with industry. They have also discovered that few employees in any of the ESP job classifications have reached the maximum salary allowed for their job, even though many employees have many years with the district.

The present range for the lowest job classification for ESP workers, which includes clerk typists, switchboard operators, Brailists and film librarians, is $5,720 to $8,424. According to the ESP, the actual top pay is $7,612.

The salary range for the top salary classification, which includes principals, assistant superintendents, secretaries and instructional equipment repairmen, is $7,276 to $10,508. The actual top pay is $10,109.

MRS. GARIBALDI and Mrs. Petersen emphasized that their request for collective bargaining is not an "anti-administration" move. Supt. Gilbert and other administrators have treated them fairly, but "we would like to be able to speak for ourselves," Mrs. Petersen said. "If we had a board member in our negotiations they would have a better understanding of what we want."

The leaders also said all members of their association are not married women with second incomes. "We have both men and women," Mrs. Garibaldi said, "and we have widows and divorcees as well as young, single girls who are supporting themselves. Because of the times now this is becoming more and more prevalent."

They also agreed that they were "encouraged" to take the action they are taking by the women's movement, even though Mrs. Petersen said, "this really isn't women's lib."

"I think some people have been afraid to speak up before for fear of seeming negative," Mrs. Garibaldi added. "But now we reached the time where if you bring something like this up, people don't think you're going to cut everybody down. The times are just right for this. After all, the district encourages us to think — and I guess we've just never tried it before."

The GROUND ROUND is a family fun restaurant where you can feel free to come as you are. Rub elbows with executives or hard hats.

The red-checkered tablecloths, candles on the table, the big stone fireplaces, a nickelodeon with songs of yesteryear make it an informal place where you can have fun and enjoy the good old days feeling all around you.

Bring the kids along too! We feature a Children's Special along with free toys, free games and free kiddie cocktails every day plus a clown on Sundays.

The food is great. Our big, half-pound, freshly-ground broiled hamburger on a dark rye roll gives the GROUND ROUND its name. We serve it with creamy cole slaw and crisp, chunky steak fries.

The menu also offers a steak platter, quarter-pound frankfurt, fried jumbo shrimp, fish 'n' chips, beef barbecue, and fried chicken. For smaller appetites, there's the GROUND ROUND, Jr. — a quarter pound broiled hamburger. Side orders include bountiful baskets of golden onion rings and french-fried mushrooms. Special desserts are featured each day.

Come see us. If your mouth isn't watering by now, it will when we serve you. And to slake your thirst we have giant foaming pitchers of soft drinks or beer — or Bloody Marys. Bring your family and friends soon. It's a likeable place.

A retirement credo

Make every day count

(The retirement years present a challenge to married couples. Those who appear happiest are the husbands and wives who keep busy and active. In a series of articles Billie Bachhuber takes a look at three area retired couples who are living busy and contented lives.)

by BILLIE BACHHUBER

There's no old rocking chair for Maud and Frederic Pfeffer. The "retired" Mount Prospect couple couldn't be busier ... or happier. They're living exactly as they planned.

When Maud arises each morning, she finds breakfast all ready. Since Fred retired from his building construction manager's job — which entailed much traveling until six years ago — Mrs. Pfeffer enjoys his company and benefits from his willing help around the house.

"His specialty is blueberry pancakes," she confided with eyes twinkling.

Because his wife suffers from arthritis, Fred also helps with housework and does the shopping. In return Maud does all she can to help him maintain and enhance their half-acre grounds.

From February to frost, Fred, a chemical engineer and building construction specialist, dreams over catalogs, plans, then plants and works to perfect the gardens that surround the Pfeffer home.

EARLY BLOOMING bushes and shrubs, ornamental and flowering fruit trees and spring flowers blossoming in sculptured beds open the garden season for the Pfeffers. Through spring, summer and fall myriad seasonal plants bloom until winter once more etches the gardens in white.

Amidst his bountiful flowers, Fred cites a few favorites: varieties of tulips, roses, lilies, poppies and tuberous begonias. One year almost two dozen different kinds of the colorful showy tuberous begonias graced a north garden, he said.

The Pfeffers also plant and reap numerous vegetables, fruits and berries. Apricots, nectarines, peaches, plums, raspberries and strawberries are included in a continuing harvest that keeps the couple busy canning and freezing.

BUT MAUD and Fred don't limit their interests to their gardens. When he isn't being called back on the job to supervise mechanical installations and equipment for the United States Gypsum Co., Fred still can't find enough time to do everything he wants to do.

"I'm not one for sitting in the old rocking chair," he said with a laugh.

Serving as a trustee at South Church Community Baptist, Mount Prospect, Fred helps with repair and carpenter work when he is needed. And he does all the driving when he and Maud travel. Following their plan "to see America first," the couple have driven through every state in the union except Alaska. To celebrate their 45th wedding anniversary, they spent two weeks in Hawaii.

For holidays and special family days they drive to St. Paul to visit their daughter, Sylvia, and her husband and two children, David, 6, and Kathleen, 3. Sylvia is a university instructor and her husband, an associate dean, Maud offered.

THE PFEFFERS also have traveled to Mexico and Canada and when Fred feels he should no longer drive, they expect to fly to Europe.

Broadening their experiences appeals to the Mount Prospect couple. Before arthritis limited her dexterity, Mrs. Pfeffer painted china ... and oils. And at one time, she hooked rugs.

While her husband traveled, Maud attended night school classes where, among other things, she learned to play bridge. She now plays with several women's groups, and she and Fred play in a couple's round robin group at church.

A former elementary school teacher, Maud also has taken courses in landscaping and flower arranging. She has put the latter skill to work decorating the altar at church and enhancing their home. In her kitchen, for example, she displays pussywillows in a blue enameled antique teapot that once belonged to her grandmother. And she has arranged bitersweet in a pewter pitcher which is part of a very old communion service, and used dried hydrangea and lunaria (silver dollars) with peacock feathers in various attractive containers to embellish the living room.

MAUD'S OUTSIDE-THE-HOME interests include membership in the DAR and Homemakers. She's a past president of her church women's guild, and she presently serves as chairman for their special missionaries.

Though each pursues individual interests, Maud and Fred like best to do things together. "Fred traveled so much and we moved around so many times (21 homes in 27 years) that I looked forward to his retirement, and I love the togetherness," Maud declared. "It's wonderful," her husband agreed.

Now that they can spend more time with one another, the pair attend night school classes together. They have learned chair caning, woodworking and currently collect shells and shark's teeth, (some dating back a million years) and make jewelry. They have fashioned metal jewelry and now are shaping and cutting semi-precious stones. They use jasper, a crystalline variety of quartz; obsidian, a volcanic glass; and also blue and green jade and other stones to form lavenders and brooches. Their next venture is to learn to set various others kinds of stones.

MAUD AND FRED PFEFFER voice only one complaint about their retirement years. Not enough time to do everything they want to do!

Fred's philosophy for retirement (though he still hasn't retired completely) is to be friendly, to help your neighbor and to retire to something. Agreeing, Maud adds, "No life is worth living unless you do things for others. We pass this way but once, so make every day count."

The Pfeffers are a couple who practice what they preach.

RETIREMENT ALLOWS time to pursue hobbies together. Maud and Fred Pfeffer are currently making jewelry, using semi-precious stones which they cut and shape themselves. Another interest is collecting shark's teeth.

ESPECIALLY FOR THE FAMILY

Speaking of ...

A vacation on campus

by KAY MARSH

Have you decided yet where you're going to spend your vacation this summer?

Whatever your plans, you may well find you can stretch your vacation dollars by checking into the opportunities available through colleges and universities.

Most colleges, for instance, offer some program of summer trips. A trip can be anything from a week's "dig" out West to a tour that covers several countries and lasts a month or longer. Many are available for credit or non-credit. True, you'll probably have to pay a registration fee and enroll in a course, but you still may find the price a bargain. Many trips, too, are built around a theme. Thus English students visit spots with literary associations; educators-to-be visit schools. You may be lucky enough to find one that ties in exactly with your special interest, whether it's music or Greek mythology.

BY THE SAME token, if you've always wanted to live in a foreign country, why not look into the opportunities available for study on a college campus abroad? Again, through various cooperative arrangements, even very small colleges often manage to move a piece of the campus to Spain, France, Mexico or wherever for summer study. Even when you add on a course and registration fee, you'll probably still find that you save money. As an extra bonus, you'll find, too, that you have unusual opportunities to meet the natives and to see local attractions that are off the beaten tourist track.

You don't, by the way, have to be a young coed to take advantage of those opportunities. Just as more and more of us of a certain maturity are returning to regular courses on campus, so, too, are we finding ourselves welcome in the foreign travel groups. And don't assume either that only the very big colleges and universities offer such programs. Many smaller schools and community colleges are finding a ready market for tours that combine travel plus education. Many also offer special trips open to alumni, so do check with your alma mater if you have one.

CLOSER TO HOME, more and more colleges are opening up their dorms to vacationers for nightly or weekly stays. Midwestern institutions in this category include such diverse schools as Indiana Tri-State College in Angola, Xavier University in Cincinnati, Northwood Institute in Midland, Mich., and Indiana University in Bloomington. Of course, you'll have to check in advance with specific institutions in the areas where you're going to be. But more rentals are available during the summer when fewer students are on campus.

Other institutions of higher education, such as Ferrum College in Ferrum, Va., offer package plans for vacationing families. The relatively modest rates are usually all-inclusive and include room and board plus the use of all campus facilities, including sports, plus perhaps some special instruction or courses.

If you'd like to know more about what's available, check with individual colleges in areas where you plan to visit. Or check your library for a copy of Mort Barish's book, "Mort's Guide to Low-Cost Vacations and Lodgings on College Campuses."

Even without a guidebook or detailed advance planning, you will find it worth your while to visit the campus scene wherever you are on vacation this summer.

COLLEGE CAFETERIAS and student unions are usually open to the public, and most offer bargains in food service. Nearby, too, will be various private enterprises offering food and other services at prices geared to student budgets.

If you're looking for T-shirts and souvenirs, you can generally count on quality and price at the local campus book store.

As for sports, most colleges have tennis courts, golf courses; pools and such. True, many require that you show a student or faculty card to use them. Here again, though, the facilities are sometimes available to summer visitors, especially if you're staying in a dorm.

Resident or non-resident visitor, do pick up a copy of the student newspaper and/or browse around the bulletin boards on campus to find details on films, plays, lectures, concerts and other entertainment events scheduled at low or no cost.

In short, add a college campus or so to your vacation itinerary this summer. You're almost sure to save some money — and your travel memories should be considerably richer, too.

Women and children first

by JULIE MARTOCCIO

If you're a recent bride, or planning to become one, congratulations! May your life be filled with joy, perfect health and complete communication with your husband.

By now, you've probably been inundated with advice from family and friends. I hope, though, that someone has suggested that you see your family lawyer.

If not, it might be a good idea to start thinking about the practical side of your new relationship. It's true, at least in one sense, that marriage makes you "one." But let me point out now, so you may avoid a headache or two later on, that there are three, not two, parties to a marriage contract.

The "law" is that uninvited guest who hovers over the ceremony and stays with it until divorce or death do you part — and oftentimes beyond!

Whatever I suggest here applies to hubby too. If and when you decide to see a lawyer, bring your spouse along and let your lawyer guide him too. We believe in preventive medicine. Why not preventive legal advice?

Even though you may think that "I do" means I do the dishes, mending and the cooking, that's not all. The law imposes other duties on you now that you have tied the proverbial knot. For instance:

- Under Illinois law, both husband and wife are personally liable for debts of the family. Any debts created by either or both spouses become the joint legal obligations of both. In other words, you may be liable for your husband's debts. This is an important law to ponder and reflect upon because where in the past the law held spouses responsible for what was termed "necessaries," meaning the basic needs of food, clothing, shelter and similar items, today any purchase made on behalf of the family and/or for the use of the family is considered a "family expense." The term, as you can see, is broader than "necessity" and includes almost any item purchased that is consistent with the social and financial status of the family. In some cases, this could even mean such things as a yacht!

- Note also, please, that if you are a minor, this fact does not relieve you of your legal responsibilities. Once legally married, you are "emancipated" from your status of minor and cannot use that as an excuse to ease out of debts.

- If you have insurance policies, stocks, bonds and securities and if you wish to have your husband share an interest in these possessions, you might want to remove the names of beneficiaries and joint owners and replace them with his name.

- At such a happy time, it may seem inappropriate to mention death, but planning one's future should be done while a person is still happy and healthy. A will takes care of your wishes for the disposal of your property which otherwise is left to court decisions. If you should die without a will, your spouse would receive one-third and your children or other descendants would receive two-thirds.

- Also, in the event of your death and no provision for a guardian for your minor children, the courts would have to designate one. In addition, the cost of the guardian's bond is dependent upon the size of the estate and can sometimes prove costly.

Court records are filled with tales of battles between warring relatives over the custody of minor children should their mother and father die simultaneously without having designated a guardian. Think this over even though chances are slim that such a tragedy might occur.

Other situations which may pop up from time to time to plague you can be discussed between you and your family lawyer. But may I suggest that you have your name changed on your driver's license, attend to Social Security matters, decide what you want to do about arranging your bank account to suit your needs and attitudes about sharing or keeping certain properties in your own name?

Then sit back and listen as your husband goes through the same routine to protect you. Both of you will be "winners."

(Readers are invited to submit questions regarding legal problems of women and children. Write to Attorney Julie Martoccio in care of Suburban Living, Paddock Publications, Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60006. The column is intended to inform, not advise.)

GARDENING MAKES for a contented retirement, as Fred Pfeffer can testify. Though he occasionally is called back on the job, Fred spends much time tending flowers, vegetables and fruit trees in his gardens with help from his wife, Maud. The couple can and freeze their bountiful harvest.

A New Year's Day romance

New Year's Day 1972 is special to Kathryn A. Blong and her bridegroom, Michael M. O'Connell. That was the date of their first meeting, and on last May 25 they were married.

Kathryn is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Blong, Arlington Heights, and Michael is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William O'Connell, Mount Prospect. Their double ring wedding took place in St. James Church, Arlington Heights, at 11 a.m. Kathryn made her own gown, a white A-line, for her wedding. A floppy white hat and old-fashioned bouquet completed her bridal ensemble.

Her maids also sewed their own pale blue gowns which were made from the same pattern as the bride's dress. They also wore floppy white hats with a single white rose. Diane Blong was her sister's maid of honor, and bridesmaids were Beverly Matre, Stevens Point, Wis., and Susan Savageau, a cousin from Pompton Lakes, N.J. Mary Jo Blong, sister of the bride, was junior bridesmaid. Her gown was in white with blue flowers to match the other maids.

MARTIN CIEBIEN, Park Ridge, was best man. The groom's brothers, Timothy and Patrick, and Michael Kouanda, North Riverside, and Robert Ehrhardt, Pontiac, Ill., were ushers.

The Farman Hotel in Lake Zurich was the setting for the dinner reception at which 140 guests greeted the bridal couple. That evening, an open house was held in the home of the bride's parents.

The newlyweds honeymooned 10 days in Lake Barkley, Ky., and are now at home in Hoffman Estates. The new Mrs. O'Connell is employed by The Treasury in Rolling Meadows, and the bridegroom is with AM-Multigraphics Div., Mount Prospect.

Volleyball teammates married May 25

Maureen A. Michalski and Otis W. Kirchhoefer were literally teamed on the same co-recreational volleyball team at Illinois State University. That was two years ago and they've been on the same team ever since. They were married May 25 just a week after their graduation from Illinois State.

A graduate of Prospect High School, Maureen is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Michalski, 15 S. Evanston, Arlington Heights. She received her B.A. degree with a major in English-teacher education. Her bridegroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Kirchhoefer, Paxton, Ill., received a B.S. majoring in business administration.

Otis has a job with Brown, Home and Auto in Bloomington, where the newlyweds are making their home.

THE 5:30 DOUBLE ring wedding took place in St. James Catholic Church, Arlington Heights. Maureen wore a floor-length Empire gown with panel front and back of peau d'ange lace. Her veil was trimmed with the same lace, and she carried a nosegay of stephanotis, roses, baby's breath and carnations, all in white.

Halter gowns with jackets were worn by Maureen's attendants. Gail A. Willcock, Maureen's college roommate from Pekin, Ill., was in mint green and the bridesmaids, Susan A. Thornd, Griffith, Ind., and the bride's sisters, Marlene and Michelle, were in peach, sky blue and yellow, respectively. Jackets and skirts of their flocked voile gowns were in plaid; the halter tops were solid. All carried white straw baskets of mixed spring flowers. They wore picture hats to match their ensembles.

Douglas Noble, Bloomington, was best man, and groomsmen were Max Guthrie and Rod Kingston, Paxton, and Mark Ambrose, a cousin of the bride from Sterling Heights, Mich.

A reception for 120 guests was held in Old Orchard Country Club after which the newlyweds honeymooned a week in St. Louis.

Mr. and Mrs. Otis W. Kirchhoefer

Dana College pair wed in May

It was exactly one year from the day they announced their plans to their parents that Kathryn Louise Braaten and Robert W. Bresemann Jr. were married. The couple met at Dana College, Blair, Neb., where the groom, a pre-seminary student, is majoring in speech-theater.

Kathryn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Braaten of Sidney, Mont., graduated from Dana majoring in French and Spanish, and is now employed by the Blair bank. For the summer her bridegroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Bresemann, Mount Prospect, is employed by a food service company in Blair.

Their double ring wedding took place at 2 p.m. May 25 in First Lutheran Church, Blair, and the reception for 80 guests followed in the church parlors. That evening the newlyweds attended a recognition dinner at the college.

Kathryn chose a white dotted swiss Empire gown with lace trim made by her mother. Her fingertip veil was trimmed to match her gown, and she carried a nosegay of daisies. Lynn Dige, Sidney, was maid of honor, and Connie Gibson, Omaha, Neb., was bridesmaid. Both wore blue polka dot swiss gowns with white lace trim, made by the maid of honor. White picture hats completed their ensembles.

Best man was Charles P. Crow Jr., Blair, and ushers were the couple's brothers, Tom Braaten and Paul Bresemann.

Burning Tree Lane, Arlington Heights, was graduated from Wheeling High in January '73, and her bridegroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. LeRoy Lueders, 136 Mohawk Trail, Buffalo Grove, in '72. Lyn is now with Allstate in Northbrook and James with Paragon Pool, Wheeling.

Their 11 a.m. wedding took place in St. Edna's Church, Arlington Heights, with Lyn wearing a Victorian gown of tiered lace with hoop skirt. Her cathedral train was edged in lace, and she carried a bouquet of white Sweetheart roses.

KAY WILLIAMS was her sister's maid of honor, and Betsy MacRobert, Arlington Heights; Donna Schneider, Avon, Ohio; and Chris Lambros, Jamestown, N.Y., were bridesmaids. Junior bridesmaid was the bride's sister, Sue. All wore sheer flowered prints, Kay's in mint green, the others in apricot. Each carried a white basket of green and peach-tinted daisies, white and peach roses and yellow mums.

Chris Krolack, Buffalo Grove, was best man, and ushers were the groom's brother, John, Buffalo Grove; John Kenney and Mike Matson, Arlington Heights; and Marty Clifford, Wheeling.

A reception for 150 guests was held at Allgauer's Fireside in Northbrook.

For a Happy Life

It's fun in June to:

1. Keep a summer diary — express your thoughts, your dreams, your moods.
2. Have the tires of your automobile rotated.
3. Celebrate the wedding anniversary of two people you love by giving for them a champagne brunch.
4. Study your expression and give it a rating — pleasant, sober, dreary, or what?
5. Give five professional-like cooking lessons to your youngsters during the next five weeks.
6. Simplify your life. Search the house for things you no longer use and discard them.
7. Look up an old school friend whom you have not seen for ten or more years.
8. Note this thought by Emerson: "Great hearts send forth the secret force that incessantly draws great events."

A honey of a chocolate cake

Dear Dorothy: Your mention of the digestibility of honey hit the mark with me. I've always had a kind of yen for chocolate cake using honey, but I've never seen such a recipe.—Mrs. Troy Hardenberg

Since you're game, here's one. Cream two-thirds cup of shortening and one cup of liquid honey. Then beat in two eggs. Now you face a triple sifting of one-half cup of cocoa, one teaspoon of salt, two teaspoons of baking powder and two cups of sifted cake flour. In other words, all these ingredients get sifted together three times.

All you need now are three-fourths cup of buttermilk and one teaspoon of vanilla. Add the dry ingredients alternately with the buttermilk and vanilla to the creamed mixture and beat thoroughly. Pour the finished batter into two greased and floured eight-inch cake pans and bake at 350 degrees for about 18 minutes. Cool. Spread one cup of any frosting that appeals to you between the layers and another cup on top. Temptation, get away from my door.

Dear Dorothy: I have a handsome velvet skirt which gets very "flattened" when I sit for some time. Is there any way I can take care of this on my own?—Mildred Von Eicht

The best way to handle this by yourself is to use a hand steamer, directed on the wrong side of the skirt. Don't touch the velvet while it's damp. These hand steamers are great when you're traveling.

Dear Dorothy: I have a bunch of mismatched nylons — all a beige shade. I've heard that boiling them with salt will make them the same color. Have you heard of this — and maybe know the amount necessary?—Julia Mahoney

Barb MacNamara chooses tri-color theme

An apricot, green and yellow color scheme was chosen by Barbara MacNamara for her marriage May 25 to Robert W. Scheffel Jr. Her maid of honor was in an apricot dotted swiss gown, her maids in green and yellow.

Barbara, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John MacNamara, 1919 Birchwood Ln., Arlington Heights, and Robert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Scheffel, 1450 Marcy Ln., Wheeling, met when both were employed at the Wheeling Dog 'N Suds nearly four years ago. Until her marriage, Barb, a '74 graduate of Hershey High School, was employed by Mr. Steak in Wheeling. Robert, a '71 graduate of Wheeling High School, is a senior at the University of Illinois and the newlyweds are making their home in a Champaign apartment. The groom is employed by the Champaign Hilton.

THE BRIDE'S sister, Kathy, was maid of honor, and her sister, Carolyn, and Abbie Gols, Arlington Heights, were bridesmaids. With their dotted swiss gowns they wore picture hats and carried carnations to match their gowns with lily of the valley. The bride was in a peau de sole gown and carried carnations, lily of the valley and baby's breath.

Paul Scheffel was his brother's best man, and ushers were Bill McCoppin and Bob Elcheberg, Prospect Heights; Gary Pfeiffer, Barrington; and Ray Kozel, Moline, Ill.

The double ring noontime wedding was held in St. Mary's Church, Buffalo Grove. A champagne luncheon for 150 at Howard Johnson's in Palatine was followed by an open house at the home of the bride's parents.

The newlyweds honeymooned a week in the Smokies and in St. Louis.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Scheffel Jr.

Wedding and graduation all in the same weekend

The last weekend in May was a busy one for Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Miles, 647 Wilton Court, Palatine. On Saturday, May 25, their daughter, Barbara Ann, was married to Todd Anderson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dean W. Anderson of Rock Island, and on Sunday their brand new son-in-law was graduated from Augustana College, Rock Island.

Barbara, a graduate of Palatine High School, will continue her studies at Augustana and meanwhile Todd has a job with John Deere Co., Rock Island.

The double ring wedding took place in Ascension Chapel at Augustana College at 11 a.m. with Barbara wearing a silk organza gown over white satin trimmed in Venise lace and a scattering of lace medallions. Her waist-length mantilla veil was edged with the lace and also trimmed with medallions, and she carried a colonial bouquet of pink Bridal Path roses, white daisies and baby's breath.

HER COLLEGE roommate, Ann Swanson, Champaign, was maid of honor, and her bridesmaids were her sister, Diana, and Julie Cramer, Palatine. The girls wore blue nylon gowns with white lace over-pattern. Their gowns, like the bride's, had scooped, ruffled necklines and ruffles at the wrists. Their flowers were blue carnations, white daisies and baby's breath in white baskets.

John Caruso, Ottawa, Ill., was best man, and ushers were Todd's brothers, Dwight and Darrel. Groomsmen were Tom Anderson, Oak Park, and Chris Nelson, Elgin.

A luncheon reception for 125 guests was held at The Plantation in Moline after which the couple left to honeymoon at Whitefish Falls, Ontario, Can.

The doctor says

by Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

Diet controversy on diverticulosis

Some controversy has arisen recently regarding the diet for a person suffering from diverticulitis. Can you tell me if it is still considered necessary for a person with this disease to leave off all roughage? Could you give a diet for such a person?

Yes, the controversy has arisen because of new studies on management of such problems. You need to separate the different medical problems that doctors are talking about, however.

Diverticulosis is a condition of pockets extending off the colon. Whenever these become inflamed, they are called diverticulitis. The management of the two conditions is slightly different.

During the period of inflammation one has a form of appendicitis. Under these circumstances, it is important to have a very mild diet and sometimes no food by mouth at all until the inflammation has subsided.

ONCE THE DIVERTICULITIS is over and the acute inflammation has subsided, then the diet is different for long term management of the problem of diverticulosis. It is usually associated with the spastic colon-type problems. In recent years a number of investigators have contended, with reasonably good evidence, that a major cause of spastic colon, and hence diverticulosis, is absence of roughage of fiber in the diet, particularly cereal fiber.

These physicians have advocated that the diet for diverticulosis or spastic colon should include whole wheat bread (be careful to get the kind that really is made from whole wheat flour and not half whole wheat, half white four and then colored). The diet should avoid all products made with white flour, including any of the dessert items.

The whole point is to get whole cereal fiber into the diet. Salads and vegetables are also important. The idea is to provide sufficient bulk in the diet that the colon, which is a long muscular tube, will have something to contract against. When there is very little bulk in the diet, as caused by a very bland diet with little roughage, there is not enough bulk in the colon, and the colon overcontracts causing spasms. This leads to spastic colon problems which in turn can lead to diverticulosis.

What affect does alcohol have on angina pectoris?

Angina pectoris is chest pain or discomfort of very short duration from heart disease. If that's really the problem, it should last less than 10 minutes, otherwise, it's something else.

In the past, doctors sometimes advocated using alcohol to relieve angina pectoris or heart pain and thought that it increased the blood flow to the heart muscle.

With the ability to study the blood flow to the heart muscle and the various aspects of the circulation in detail, it has been adequately demonstrated that alcohol does not increase the blood flow to the heart muscle. In fact, individuals who have serious heart disease may have decreased heart function even after drinking amounts of alcohol.

About the only advantage of alcohol in a heart patient is its sedative action or tranquilizing action, and this can be achieved by a number of medications without running the risk of developing an alcohol habit. In brief, alcohol is not a useful treatment for angina pectoris. (Newspaper Enterprise Assn.)

Automation comes to the tobacco auction

by ELIOT BRENNER

RALEIGH, N.C. — Summertime for a North Carolina farm boy used to mean hours in a musty tobacco barn, waiting in the stifling August heat while his father's sheets of flue-cured tobacco were sold.

Under an automated auction system being put into commercial use for the first time in the state in July, the time from the back of the truck to the issuance of a sales check has been cut to as little as 30 minutes.

Under development since 1966, the system was designed by Albert Graves, a U.S. Department of Agriculture industrial engineer attached to North Carolina State University.

THROUGH A COMBINATION of motor- and gravity-driven conveyor belts, tobacco is taken from the truck, run through weighing scales and past federal graders, and then on by an auctioneer who controls the speed of the belt.

Once past the auctioneer, the tobacco moves to the final portion of the belt, where firms pick up their purchases.

Tobacco officials say everyone wins with the system. The buyers get fresher tobacco. The farmer gets in and out of the warehouse faster. And the warehouseman handles more tobacco during a sales season.

"The tobacco moves past the people instead of the people past the tobacco," said Graves in a recent interview.

THE SYSTEM costs about $100,000, and is custom designed by Graves for each warehouse installing it. All the machinery is purchased from commercial suppliers.

The Five Points Warehouse at Fuquay-Varina, N.C., 15 miles southeast of Raleigh, will be the first warehouse in the nation to use the complete system. At least five others, including ones at Rocky Mount, N.C., and Lake City, Fla., have expressed interest in acquiring it.

The system will enable warehousemen to schedule farm-to-warehouse deliveries throughout the day rather than face a flood of trucks waiting each morning for the start of the day's sales.

Farmers designating their tobacco for sale at the Five Points Warehouse under the new program, which requires designation to qualify for federal crop support payments, will be told when to arrive and then will tell warehouse officials how much tobacco they will be bringing on a given day.

"The tobacco is on the line about 10 minutes. The growers can come in, watch it sold, and if he doesn't want to reject the price, have his check and be gone in an average of 30 minutes," Graves said.

UNDER THE OLD auction methods, farmers brought their tobacco to the warehouse of their choice, without prior designation, unloaded it, then waited for it to be weighed, graded and auctioned before collecting their checks.

Because auctioneers move slowly down the rows of tobacco lining the floor of dark warehouses, it sometimes took a full day for the entire process.

During its testing phase, he said, the system won wide acceptance from growers, and indications are that despite the fact it may produce idle warehouse floor space, warehousemen are also keen on the idea because more tobacco can be sold in a given amount of time.

One warehouse, working six hours a day, could handle as much as 26 million pounds of leaf during a sales season, he said.

Investment environment should improve: executive

A senior investment official of Investors Diversified Services said Tuesday that he expects the investment environment to improve substantially in the coming months.

Eugene C. Sit, an IDS vice president and senior portfolio manager, told members of the Investment Analysts Society of Chicago at the Bismarck Hotel that he sees the rate of inflation diminishing and interest rates declining, both resulting in a more favorable financial market.

Because of reduced demand pressures here and abroad, he said IDS expects the rate of inflation to be around 7 to 8 percent by the end of 1974, "a meaningful improvement over the approximately 10 per cent-plus annual rate we're experiencing now." He added that the 1975 rate of inflation "probably will be in the neighborhood of 6 to 7 percent."

IDS EXPECTS economic growth to be sluggish in the coming months, he said, but "we should see the economic recovery gaining strength in the second half of 1975." He added that the consumer will be in a "much better mood," as his purchasing power improves, with durable goods demand and housing leading the recovery.

Sit sees the slower rate of inflation resulting in lower money market rates and long-term rates stabilizing in the 9 percent area. He feels the President's political problems will be resolved "within the coming months."

Despite these "near-term problems," Sit said the long-term outlook for the stock market is quite favorable because the problems of high inflation, high interest rates and the President's political problems probably already are discounted in current stock prices. Common stocks currently offer excellent values, he said, adding that stocks on a price-earnings ratio basis are "as low as twenty years ago."

Because Sit believes the investment

Eugene C. Sit

community is devoting an "inordinate amount of time to the negatives," he suggested focusing on some "longer-term positives" in the U.S. investment picture:

- favorable demographic factors such as rapid growth in the 25-to-34-year-old age group with high income, good productivity and strong desires to consume,
- a relatively strong position for the United States in terms of natural resources, which will enhance the nation's competitive position with other industrialized nations,
- the prospect of larger productivity gains coming from increased capital investments during the next few years,
- the likelihood of a stable dollar, which will attract foreign funds,
- a strengthening of American political institutions "as a result of recent lessons."

Sit, now living in Minneapolis, IDS headquarters, worked eight years for Commonwealth Edison in Chicago where he was assistant to the chairman of the finance committee. He was graduated from DePaul University.

At IDS his duties include investment supervision of three mutual funds — IDS New Dimensions Fund, IDS Growth Fund, and IDS Progressive Fund.

Win at bridge

Impossible? South wheels it in South's jump to three spades was a slight overbid, but South had great and well-deserved confidence in his own dummy play.

West opened the king of hearts and shifted to the queen of diamonds. South won in dummy and paused to take stock. Things did not look at all good. He had lost one heart. Surely he had to lose at least one trump and one diamond and might well lose two cards in each of those suits.

You readers have been looking at dummy and can see that neither trumps nor diamonds are going to break, but South made his contract anyway.

He started by ruffing a heart at trick three. Then he played king and ace of spades. West showed out, but that didn't stop South's machinery from working. He ruffed another heart, played king and ace of clubs and ruffed a club. Then he entered dummy with the last high diamond and ruffed dummy's last club for his 10 trick.

South still had two losing diamonds and West had two winners, but they did him no good as East had to trump them.

The whole play is worth study. Note that if South had not stopped to ruff a heart at trick three he would have been one entry short and would not have been able to score all his little trumps. Also, note the timing. If he ever led dummy's fourth heart, East would have been able to ruff in and spoil all South's fun.

Solid-State Hope

by Ed Landwehr

Solid-state circuitry in color TV has raised hopes for fewer service calls. But the need for more sophisticated equipment and technical knowledge might reduce the availability of service. Many TV businesses and part-timers have already quit or only accept jobs on the older sets. There may be less repairs on solid-state circuitry, but the cost could be higher.

Also circuitry is constantly being redesigned. It's a full-time vocation to stay proficient with the new ideas that come out day after day.

Landwehr's Home Appliances subscribes to the necessary electronic publications that keep us abreast of changes as quickly as they occur. We have the technical equipment and work full time on electronics. Phone 255-0700 and be assured of full satisfaction for the least cost.

And when you buy a new color TV or any appliance from our large display at 1000 W. Northwest Highway, Arlington Heights, you can be sure of service for years to come.

Video tastemakers review fall lineup

HOLLYWOOD — It is midnight Monday and a group of weary journalists have begun to slip out of a penthouse suite and down the glittering corridors of the mammoth Century Plaza Hotel.

The newsmen are the remaining members of the American Broadcasting Co.'s fall television presentation. They have just had their last drink and handshakes with ABC's executives.

In a few moments, many will prepare for sleep. Others will stop for a nightcap and a few will write the next day's television column.

FOR FIVE DAYS, these men and women have been exposed to ABC's fall television lineup. They have screened pilot films for next season's new shows. They have met the stars. And they have heard speeches from the network's decision makers.

This is the selling of a television season, an elaborate public relations effort that has gathered together 75 newsmen on the belief their comments will influence the public and the ratings.

Within a few hours, ABC's executives will have departed for New York and Los Angeles. CBS will then begin its presentation and NBC will follow on Friday.

Television in review

by Frank S. Swerdlow

ALL OF THIS is serious business for the networks. It means millions of dollars in advertising fees — the top network demands more than the others.

There, of course, have been lighter moments to this presentation. The newsmen have been dined and wined liberally. They have played tennis and they have had their farewell party with ABC until January when they return for the second season's presentation.

What is ironic about these annual fall presentations is that many of the new stars may be dropped by the networks if their shows fall in the ratings.

BUT FOR NOW, these stars are built up like potatoes and are sought after for interviews. In a few months, however, the only mention some of them might get in the press is a line or two announcing the cancellation of their shows.

What seems consistent about Hollywood and the television industry is that the newsmen and the press agents will always be there. Only the stars come and go.

Top athlete award to Falcons' Brinkman

by ART MUGALIAN

The photographs in Craig Brinkman's bedroom tell the story. They tell where Craig has been and where he wants to go. The pictures are Dick Butkus, Vince Lombardi, Ray Nitschke.

The story is football. Brinkman, the 1974 Forest View High School graduate, an all-state gridiron choice last fall, will soon begin his college linebacking career at Indiana University, where he won a full athletic scholarship.

And the Arlington Heights resident will depart for Bloomington, Ind. with another honor. He has been named the Herald's Athlete-of-the-Year. The award recognizes Craig's outstanding achievements during the past school year.

Brinkman, at 6-foot-1 and 220 pounds, was a three-year letterman in football and there is no doubt that the pigskin game is his main passion. Plenty of people around the country noticed Craig — he was heavily recruited by the major universities, including Arkansas, North-western, and Illinois, before he chose Indiana. They wanted him to play football. But Craig also won letters in basketball and track his senior year.

"We always thought Craig's best sport would be basketball," said Ralph Brinkman, the proud father, who himself measures nearly 6-foot-3. "At Holmes Junior High he averaged 30 points a game and broke the school scoring record. He was some shooter then."

In high school Craig developed other talents on the hardwood. After playing on the most successful freshman basketball squad ever assembled at Forest View, he moved up to junior-varsity status, where he toiled for two seasons. Finally, in his senior year, Brinkman landed a spot on the Falcons' varsity.

"Craig was concerned about his lack of scoring," said head basketball coach Ted Wissen. "I told him to concentrate on his defense and his rebounding — the points would come. Craig listened."

Brinkman averaged only seven points per contest during Forest View's winningest season ever. But the Falcons would not have won 19 games if Craig hadn't pulled down enough rebounds to lead the team.

Wissen's bunch was the epitome of team basketball. With no one standing taller than 6-3, the Falcons won with quickness, agility, defense and a well-coordinated team effort.

"Those kids had a lot of pride," Wissen recalled, "and Craig fit right in with them. He's a very good kid attitude-wise. And I have to give him credit — it was during the basketball season that he was going through all that recruiting pressure."

Brinkman fought the battle of the backboards against some of the biggest centers the area has ever seen — Dan Donahue, Steve Irion, Paul Withney. He never gave away an inch in determination.

And in track and field, Craig went right out to challenge the best in the state. Without the benefit of a full indoor season, he managed to capture a second place in the Mid-Suburban League shot put competition behind John Sloan of Rolling Meadows, the Illinois champion.

The discus was Brinkman's top event, though. In the MSL meet, Craig beat Sloan and several other weight specialists with a toss of 151-0.

Forest View's track coach will watch wistfully as Brinkman heads for the college gridiron. "If Craig added about 25 pounds, he could be a really good college weight man," said Bill Mohrmann.

"We're going to miss this kid," Mohrmann continued. "We'll miss his leadership. The thing I really admired about Craig is that he was always around encouraging the other kids in events he didn't know a thing about."

Brinkman capped his athletic career by qualifying for the 1974 state track meet in both the shot and discus. He ranked ninth in the state in discus at Charleston with a heave of 161-9.

"I'd like to go out for track and field in college," he said, "but I'll have to wait and see."

The Forest View grad leaves no doubt as to his preferred field of endeavor, though. "Yes, I'd like to play pro football," Brinkman said, "if I can make it."

Brinkman is aware of the rugged path leading to the pro ranks. He knows that four tough years of college ball are still ahead of him. He realizes that he may not make it.

"I plan on going into business law at Indiana," he said. The business program at Forest View cultivated his interest in the consumer protection field. "But it's a big state school and if I change my mind, I could go into almost anything else."

"Craig knows that he should go to school for an education," said Ralph Brinkman, "so we're not even thinking about pro football now, just like we weren't thinking about college ball during high school. The education is the important thing."

But the immediate matter on Craig Brinkman's mind is the upcoming football season. One reason Craig chose Indiana over some of the more powerful football schools is that the Indiana recruiters were bluntly honest with the Brinkmans.

"They told me I might play as a freshman, but they didn't make any promises," Craig said. "It depends on how I do and how some other players develop."

Brinkman will probably play strong-side linebacker. In high school he performed at linebacker and offensive tackle. Indiana would like him to put on a little more weight and still retain his 101.3 speed over 40 yards.

Football is Brinkman's strong suit and Forest View gridiron coach Fred Lussow gave as good a reason as any why Craig was a unanimous choice as Herald Athlete-of-the-Year: "Craig Brinkman was the best all-around player in the league."

We could have played him almost anywhere." And Brinkman's versatility wasn't confined to the football field — his four-year high school record at Forest View proves that.

Where he plays and what he plays are still part of an option package for Brinkman — he has more decisions in his future.

But for now, Craig Brinkman is Athlete-of-the-Year. It's a good start.

AN ATHLETE FOR all seasons is Craig Brinkman of Forest View High School, shown with his trophy designating him the Herald Athlete-of-the-Year. The Arlington Heights resident starred in football, basketball, and track and field for Forest View. Brinkman, who graduated last week, now heads for Indiana U. on a football scholarship.

WHOOOOSH! TEN times, Willie Kozel threw his strikeout pitch Sunday when Wheeling opened Ninth District legion play with a 4-2 win over Arlington.

Kozel allowed losing pitcher Dar Townsend's solo homer, Brett Fraso's double and three singles.

Hanisch fires 2-hitter; Wheeling tops Logan Square in league play

by ART MUGALIAN

Gerry Grybash is learning new things about his Wheeling American Legion baseball team every day.

Sunday the coach learned that Willie Kozel knows how to pitch and he found out that Jeff Brisson has a rifle arm in center field.

Monday, Grybash discovered another pitcher on the staff when Jeff Hanisch tossed a two-hit shutout at the Logan Square Lions, beating them, 2-0. It was Wheeling's second straight win in Ninth District Legion competition and their third victory overall against no losses.

"You know, I just got into town last week and everybody told me we had no pitching on this team," said Grybash, the youthful head man of the Wheeling squad. "They said that if we had a weakness it was on the mound. But yesterday Kozel pitched a good game and today Hanisch was really tough. He pitched a great game."

Hanisch's masterpiece, which followed Kozel's win over Des Plaines the day before, gives the Wheeling team a flashy one-two pitching punch. And Grybash's third pitcher, Mitch Gullett, is no slouch, either.

Wheeling got all the hitting necessary for the win over Logan Square in the fifth inning when Carl Pfister and Brisson got together to break up a scoreless tie. Pfister cracked his bat in looping a base hit into short left-center field, and after Lion hurler Gary Gustafson retired the next two batters, Brisson tripled to the fence in right center. Centerfielder Pat Rooney made a shoestring attempt on Brisson's drive, but he missed it and Pfister was able to score from first.

In the sixth inning, Wheeling padded the lead. Paul Groot singled up the middle and pinch runner Mark Malouf advanced to second on a balk. Again after two out, Pfister blasted a triple in the power alley in right, sending home the second and final run of the game.

Righthander Hanisch struck out three and was helped around the bases by a wild pitch. Elmhurst tallied twice off Halas in the second but Arlington came back with three in the third. George Vukovich and Aguirre had the inning's only hits, a single by each. Two errors and one wild pitch contributed to the rally.

Elmhurst tied the game at 5-5 during the home third. Then Arlington went back on top for good in the fourth.

Split by Des Plaines-Arlington entry

Lloyd Meyer's Des Plaines-Arlington legion team has split two non-Ninth District games since Saturday, resulting in a 2-4 season record before Tuesday's contest against Logan Square.

Don Kamps was the losing pitcher on Saturday as Des Plaines-Arlington fell, 7-1, at Wilmette. Arlington collected just four hits, two of them singles by Dar Townsend, Jerry DeSimone doubled and George Vukovich singled. Arlington scored in the seventh inning.

Their luck was far improved on Monday when Des Plaines-Arlington beat host Elmhurst, 8-5. Tim Halas got the win in the abbreviated five inning game.

Victory avenged a 15-7 season opening loss to Elmhurst.

It was a 5-5 game after three innings. Arlington's decisive sixth run crossed in the fourth, Joe Ripplinger carrying it home. He tripled two batters ahead of Tom Good's double.

Arlington added two insurance runs in the fifth. Mike Saugling and Dave Thorsen opened with walks. Three more walks followed. A passed ball and wild pitch were included as Meyer's club scored twice despite no hits.

The local club had taken a 2-0 lead with single runs each of the first two innings. Ripplinger tripled and scored in the first. Saugling singled to open the second and was helped around the bases by a wild pitch.

Elmhurst tallied twice off Halas in the second but Arlington came back with three in the third. George Vukovich and Aguirre had the inning's only hits, a single by each. Two errors and one wild pitch contributed to the rally.

Logan Square wins three on road

by MIKE GARBUS

Logan Square displayed plenty of firepower with 50 hits and 45 runs, but returned from a road trip with only a 3-2 mark in legion baseball action last week.

Thursday, the Lions traveled to Barrington where a last inning rally failed to keep the game from being called, leaving the visitors on the short end of a 12-8 count. At that time, there was nobody out with the bases loaded and one run already in.

Logan Square drew first blood in the opening stanza, but then was swamped when Barrington scored seven of their own in the second. Pat Rooney's single, triple, home run and six runs batted in weren't enough, however, to overcome the hosts and keep Gary Gustafson from sustaining the loss.

Friday, the Lions fell to Bloomington in a nine-inning bout 5-3.

Mark Hartley opened the game with an infield single and was promptly tripled home by the red-hot Rooney. Rooney himself crossed on a wild pitch. In the seventh, Rooney's single plated Jim Bucaro who had reached on an error.

That was all the local entry could manage, however, as starter Brian Nelson took it on the chin.

Saturday, the Logan Square caravan rolled into Pekin and swept a doubleheader by twin 10-5 scores, then an extra inning single affair on Sunday, 14-11.

Once again, the Lions took the initiative in the first when Bucaro's double scored John Caruso, Steve Bobowski's single then tallied Bucaro.

In the third, a Bobowski two-bagger and singles by Paul Obuchowski and Nelson were good for three runs. A walk to Caruso forced home another.

Continuing with the odd inning scoring in the fifth, Hartley singled and Caruso doubled him in. Bucaro's one-base rap chased Caruso.

Hartley accounted for the Lions' final two runs in the sixth with a two-run single as Bobowski earned the victory giving up eight hits, while walking three and striking out four.

The Lions hit Pekin with three in the opening stanza of the nightcap on the strength of Bucaro's triple and singles by Bobowski and Nelson.

Another Bobowski single and a two-out, two-run single by Jim Thompson cashed another trio of runs in during the third frame.

The visitors iced the decision in the sixth as Bucaro's two-run hit and two Pekin errors added four more runs.

Jim Dumke got the win with relief help from Obuchowski. Combined, they surrendered 10 hits, walking four and fan-

Lions and walked nobody as he received superb support from the Wheeling fielders. Hanisch kept the ball low and Logan Square continuously beat it into the ground. Wheeling first baseman George Kange handled 10 putouts.

Only four balls were hit to the outfield, including a ground single off Hanisch. The other hit was of the infield variety.

Grybash's team is off to a flying start in 1974, thanks largely to the pitchers. They have taught the coach a thing or two so far. And, hopefully, Grybash still has a lot to learn.

Wilbins signs today with San Francisco

Arlington Heights' Mike Wilbins, who helped Southern Illinois University to third place in last week's College World Series, will sign a professional baseball contract today with Decatur, a class "A" franchise of the San Francisco Giants.

Reached at home Monday afternoon, Wilbins declined to reveal contract terms but said he'll receive a "substantial bonus for a 12th round draft pick."

The Giants selected Wilbins during June 5th free agent drafting in New York that also saw the Chicago White Sox make Forest View's Larry Monroe their No. 1 pick.

Monroe agreed to terms on June 8 and left Monday of this week for Sarasota in the Gulf Coast League.

Wilbins had two rather distinguished seasons at SIU-Carbondale. As a junior, he batted .356 with 10 doubles, two triples and two home runs.

He got off to a slow start this season and missed 11 games due to a broken thumb sustained on SIU's spring trip through Florida. In 51 games, Wilbins batted .282 with three doubles, three triples and one homer.

Wilbins had 45 hits in 176 at-bats and scored 47 runs for the Salukis. He also registered 26 RBIs, received 36 walks, stole nine bases and led SIU with a .990 fielding percentage at first base.

The Giants, his parent club, have two single "A" affiliates. The other is located in Fresno, Calif.

The trip's finale was a slugfest that began immediately in the Lions' opening frame. They played four runs with singles by Obuchowski and Bobowski and a double by Dumke doing the damage.

Four more Logan Square runs came across in the third via Bobowski's triple and RBI base hits by Dumke, Dave Minchewicz and Bob Wagner.

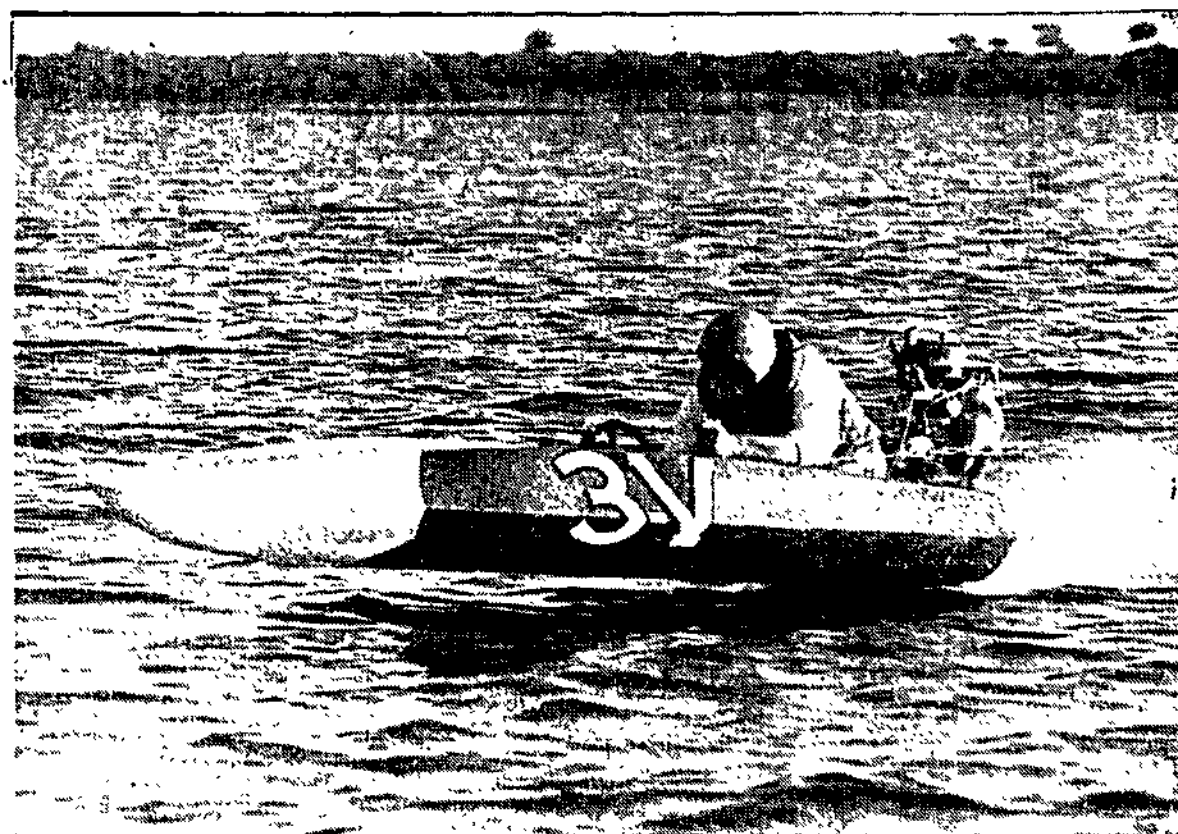

A two-run single by Dumke, another run-producing single by Minchewicz and Hartley's three-run double, the latter's coming in the eighth, turned the tide for Logan Square.

Power boats

Water daredevils race in 9 divisions of competition

Outdoor Editor

While the Indianapolis 500 is the World Series of automobile racing, the power boat industry is equally as organized, competitive and fascinating.

While not as pronounced or publicized as the NASCAR series or the Indy, power boat races don't take a backseat to the 200-mile-per-hour speeds, driver ingenuity or mechanical excellence.

The American Power Boat Association (APBA) is the nationally-recognized organization that sanctions nearly 1,000 races annually while expanding the pleasure aspect of water travel to the competitive level.

The APBA, with over 4,000 members, was founded in April, 1963 and has the meritorious distinction of developing the majority of marine engine technology and achievement.

As is the case in automobile racing, power boats have many divisions and classes which cater to a wide assortment of crafts. But unlike the four-wheel land circuit, age requirements are not nearly as prohibitive.

Nine-year-olds have received the checkered flag in some of the stock outboard races, where the expense and investment in a boat is minimal.

Racing membership in the APBA is only about $30 to begin with. Entry fees are a nominal buck or two and that will get you to the starting line.

Of course, your boat must meet certain specifications in length and engine size, for example, and pass a safety inspection. All racers must wear a protective helmet, a life jacket and have a safety throttle on the boat.

If you already have a power boat that qualifies into a class in one of the nine divisions, you're ready to go.

The general categories are: 1. Unlimited, 2. Limited Inboard, 3. Outboard, 4. Stock Outboard, 5. Outboard Pleasure Craft, 6. Offshore Power Boat, 7. Drag, 8. Cruiser and 9. Special Events.

The Unlimiteds are probably deemed the most exciting from a spectator's vantage point. These are the inboards that are the large version of the hydroplanes.

Speeds frequently surpass magic 200 mph mark with the world record on a straightaway clocked at 285. That's not exactly the ideal trolling speeds, but it would sure get you to your favorite fishing hole in a hurry.

Descriptively referred to as "thunderboats," the Unlimiteds have certain hull dimension limitations, but their power plants are usually Allison or Rolls-Royce airplane engines that burn high octane gasoline.

The hydroplanes have added disintegration to the dictionary since a mishap at such a high rate of speed usually results in the complete decomposition of the boat. The APBA Challenge Cup (Gold Cup) Regatta is run annually in this class.

Inboards are categorized into many classes since their engines are limited by specific cubic-inch displacements and their hulls must meet certain rules regarding weight and dimensions.

The Inboard division is one of the most popular since the rules generally limit the boats and engines to standard American manufacture. Modifications in some instances, are not necessary.

Inboards exceed 150 miles per hour in straightaway runs which automatically excludes beginners from competition.

The Outboards include six active classes of runabouts and seven classes of hydros, determined by engine displacement, boat dimensions and weight. The age barrier in the Midget Class is only 10 years old since the boat is small and the engine under 7.5 cubic inch displacement. Only authorized alterations of manufacturer specifications are permitted.

Stock Outboards represent the most enticing division for beginners with the age limitation set as low as nine years old. The engines must remain unaltered and only fuel compounded of standard pump gasoline and petroleum motor oil is permitted.

The Outboard Pleasure Craft division makes 14-year-olds eligible for competition in a relatively inexpensive category. The class, regulated by engine size, boat length and boat occupants' positions, appeals to family members to team in racing and provides an excellent opportunity to gain experience.

The Offshore Power Boats are characterized by high-performance engines rated by displacement up to 700 horsepower and serve as a proving ground for boat manufacturers and consumer purchase.

Normally, this division races for several hundred miles at speeds up to 50 to 60 miles per hour in seas as high as 10-12 feet. Diesel engines and fuel are commonly employed in this class.

Drag racing in a boat rivals its automotive sister in that both are usually run over a quarter mile. Speed is of the essence which means engine technology and performance are vital.

Drag racing boats idle to the starting line in head-to-head competition. From a standing start, these boats achieve speeds in excess of 200 miles per hour at the "top end."

The Fuel Division does not emphasize speed. Instead, the captain must submit an exact time and speed prediction to contest officials within a specified time limit after announcement of the course.

The Skipper with the least percentage error between his predicted elapsed time and his actual elapsed time is declared the winner. Charts and navigational skills are the passport in this type of predicted log competition.

Special Events races cover categories that aren't recognized in the above-mentioned classes. This competition would include marathons, offshore races, closed course regattas and enduros that may last up to 8-9 hours.

Despite the incredible speeds, endurance and skill demanded by APBA-sanctioned events, power boat racing has become a safe activity.

Occasionally you'll hear about a hydroplane disintegrating and the driver perishing, but never are there 19-boat pileups on the first lap.

Not only are there rigid inspections before each race, but safety throttles and automatic ignition shutoffs are insuring safer competition.

And speaking of insurance, a broad accident policy covered by Lloyds of London is available on either an economical one-day basis or for the entire year.

Fox Lake will be the site of Inboard and Outboard Division races the 4th of July. It might not make you forget the Indy 500, but it won't be much more watered down.

Three backpacking ventures are in the planning stages

Aspen Ski & Sport has planned a series of three backpacking camping trips for this summer under the direction of Bob Kaiser.

The first trip will be a weekend on July 5 to Kettle Moraine North in Central Wisconsin. The other two will be week-long visits to Isle Royale in Lake Superior off the shores of Michigan's Upper Peninsula the weeks of Aug. 1 and Aug. 22.

The Kettle Moraine trip is to a particularly beautiful section that was carved out as the glacial ice retreated and left potholes or "kettles" and exposed huge rock formations, usually steep hills and broad vistas.

Now a Wisconsin State Park, the location is preserved as a wilderness area. The Isle Royale National Park is also of glacial origin and is acknowledged by many as the most scenic in the Midwest.

Kaiser, 30, who has had extensive outdoor experience said the interest in outdoor camping has accelerated in the past two years to the point where it is now the big thing for young people to do in the summer.

The major problem facing them has always been a lack of places to go and instruction in the basics of backpacking and camping.

In addition to simply conducting tours, Kaiser will also direct campfire lectures and discussions on all phases of outdoor living.

Interested parties may contact either Bob or Don at Aspen Ski & Sport by calling 394-2232.

Program outlines obedience changes

Among the topics to be discussed at a program to be presented Saturday by the Midwest Training Clubs Assoc., will be changes now in the works relative to obedience rules and regulations.

The program, which will be held at Barrington High School, 116 W. Main St., Barrington, starting at 10 a.m., will have as the main speaker James Dearing, head of the Obedience Department of the American Kennel Club. Dearing will outline how to best train for these new changes and what judges will be looking for at obedience trials.

Also on the panel will be Mrs. Alma Rosser an AKC obedience judge, and Bernard Brown, an outstanding trainer-exhibitor and recently approved obedience judge.

Part of the program will include the showing of a film titled "A Day With the A.K.C.," which will give viewers an excellent understanding of the workings of this organization.

of conveying information to children and adults interested in animal care. Free pet-care literature is available. In operation since the beginning of April, the unit is fully air-conditioned and equipped with its own power source.

Initially the Traveling SPCA has been booked into schools and shopping centers both in Chicago and in outlying communities. Visits to children's homes and homes for the aged will be included in future schedules. During a recent visit at the Lutheran Home for the Aged in Arlington Heights, more than 150 people toured the unit.

For information regarding mobile unit bookings, contact J. J. Shaffer, Regional Office, The Anti-Cruelty Society, 540 Frontage Rd., Northbrook, Ill. 60063. The phone number is 312-441-5644.

Shade is important —

Somewhere between all the rain drops the sun will shine this summer and with it will be some heat. Make certain that if your dog is in a kennel run or fenced in area that he has access to some shade.

If there are no trees or shrubs in the area, it's best to keep a bench or low table on hand so that the dog can get out of the hot mid-day sun by resting underneath.

Barks & Bays —

Your editor will be happy to put in timely information about your dog club event, but please! — see that the information gets to him in care of the newspaper at least three weeks prior to the event.

Ocean racing champion eyes 10-year-old mark

Dr. Bob Magoon, five-time U.S. ocean racing champion, plans an assault on the 10-year-old Miami-New York power boat record in late June or early July.

The lanky Miami Beach eye surgeon says the exact takeoff date for the 1,257-mile dash depends on weather conditions at the time.

Magoon will be driving a new 40-foot Cigarette hull powered by a pair of 482 cubic inch MerCruiser stern-drive engines in his attempt to shatter the 31-hour, 32-minute elapsed time mark set in 1964 by boat builder-engine maker Charles Johnson.

Johnson drove a 41-foot Daytona Marine Special using four 427 cubic inch turbo-charged Daytona engines hooked in tandem pairs driving two props and averaged 39.88 miles per hour.

Magoon, a seven-year veteran of offshore power boat racing and king of the circuit for the past five years, plans to average 50 to 60 m.p.h. in his 80 m.p.h. boat, running in the open ocean all the way with rare exceptions.

The finish line is 86th Street in New York City's Hudson River.

He will make one fuel stop — in North Carolina.

Magoon will retrace the historic route first established by the late Gar Wood, the legendary

Gray Fox of power boat racing, who took 47 hours to make the dash to New York in 1927 in a race against time with a locomotive. Wood was at the wheel of his famed Miss America.

The late Sam Griffith broke the existing record in 1963 when he made it to New York in 38 hours in his 31-foot Blue Mopple, a Bertram hull powered by twin 310 horsepower engines. Johnson bettered this the following year and his record has stood since.

Crewing with Magoon in his record-breaking attempt will be Miami fireman Gene Lanham and Lance Taines 19, of Hallandale, Fla.

Magoon's career in offshore powerboat racing got off to a rather inauspicious start in the Bahamas 500 in 1967 when his outboard craft plowed into a coral reef, injuring him and his navigator, Barry Cordingley, and crippling the boat. After a night on the reef, the pair limped into Nassau the next morning.

Since then, Magoon has captured two outboard national championships and three inboard national championships. In 1972 he was inducted into the American Power Boat Association's Honor Squadron, the highest honor bestowed on a U.S. power boat driver.

Handymen can construct their own vessels

One brochure says "If you have average ability to do jobs around the house... if you can use ordinary hand tools with average skill... you can put together a Luger kit as professionally as though your boat just came off a factory assembly line."

South Coast Seacraft says you can finish a South Coast 22 sailboat kit with "No special tools required. An electric drill and saber saw are very handy, but not essential. Anyone with average ability with ordinary hand tools will have absolutely no trouble with this kit."

Glen L. Marine Designs says their plans and patterns are so accurate and easy to follow that some of the their designs can be built by "the skipper not too well versed on woodworking."

This statement is in regard to an eight-foot sailing dingy, however. For Glen L.'s 36-foot Odysea cruising yacht, they admit it to be "a challenging undertaking for the experienced amateur boat-builder."

While it seems possible that only "Average skill" is all that is necessary to complete a kit boat, completing a wood boat from plans, or even with a Glen L. frame kit, which you assemble and cover with plywood, definitely would require some woodworking experience.

There is, no doubt, a considerable saving in building a boat yourself, particularly when you consider an immense percentage of the cost of any of the larger boats, 20 feet and up with cabin space, represents the cost of hand woodworking and trim in the interior.

And, with expensive exceptions, almost any person who can use a saw, drill and sandpaper can do a finishing job equal to the cabin woodwork in most finished boats.

It is in the hull and deck, where manufacturers can inexpensively exceed all but the most skilled boat builder with molded fiberglass.

Thus, except for the craftsman, a prospective boat builder would do better to stick with a fiberglass kit boat. And, although the cost of plans for a wood boat are modest, I personally am too lazy to properly care for a wood boat.

by Bob Holiday

Luger Industries, Inc., has been supplying boat kits to builders for 22 years and their line of kits ranges from 17 to 32 feet. For comparison purposes, we'll talk about the 21 foot Windward.

Described as a "family cruising sloop," the Windward kit can be assembled, according to the manufacturer, in from 60 to 85 hours. If you figure assembly time at $15 to $25 per hour, you can readily recognize the possible saving.

The Luger kit contains the seven hull and deck sections which are formed to lock together at the joints. You secure the sections from the outside with screws, putty and cover them with a trim molding kit. Inside the hull, you make the seam permanent and water tight with fiberglass strips.

Anyone can do it.

The only difference between finished hulls would be the difference in the care with which the parts were assembled. On the Windward sailing sloop, you would finish and reinforce the interior cabin, install hardware and rigging, and go sailing.

The complete kit contains everything except the keel and the sails. Here you'll select from the Economy center board at $118.95, the heavier Deluxe Centerboard at $252.50, or the better 450 pound Swing Keel at $391.50. Sails for the Windward — main and jib — are $281.75.

Furnishings — bunk cushions, galley, cabin and running lights are extras, but the kit plus centerboard or keel and sails is ready to launch. Every screw, fastener and all fiberglass bonding material is included. The kit, plus swing keel and sails would be delivered to your home for under $2400.

They also have regular "sales," which give up to 10 per cent discounts and free delivery. Write for a Luger catalog: Luger Industries, Inc., 3800 W. Highway 13, Burnsville, Minn., 55337.

The South Coast 22, also a cruising sloop, is a vastly different story. It carries a little less sail than the Luger 21-footer (189 sq. ft. versus 200 sq. ft.) and sleeps five instead of four, but it's a foot longer.

The big difference is that the South Coast hull and deck are finished. You finish the interior, install the hardware, the standing and running rigging and go sailing.

You can have the South Coast delivered by truck, but it's expensive. Most buyers choose to take delivery at the plant in Shreveport, La.

This, of course, necessitates a trailer, but you'd want a trailer with either of these boats, because one big advantage is you can keep them at home and launch them easily wherever you want to sail.

Not considering trailer cost, a South Coast kit, after you've assembled it, costs under $2800. This, you must note, is a bareboat, without such things as windows, any interior finish, galley, head, cushions, anchor, lights, etc.

The manufacturer suggests 15 to 25 hours of assembly time. As in the case of the Luger, you can do all the assembly and fitting yourself if you are patient and practical and, in both cases complete a boat that you'll be proud of.

Safety afloat in a kit boat? Ah, well. Remember that a boat you buy finished was also finished by human beings, albeit, human beings, we assume, with experience.

The most important factor to remember is that with either kit or a Glen L. pattern and frame kit, you must follow instructions meticulously.

After the Luger hull is assembled, for example, you must adhere exactly to the reinforcing instructions. Even bunks and cabin bulkheads act as reinforcement after you've installed them, so take care.

We have talked here only of sailboat kits, because that happens to be a present project, but Luger and Glen L. also have powerboat kits and plans.

Luger's glamorous 24-foot Monte Carlo cruiser kit includes all hull parts, decks, cabin sides, front and top, hatches and all assembly screws, fasteners and fiberglass bonding materials, plus patterns for all wood parts for $1775.00.

After that you'll need deck hardware, running lights, steering and all the other accessories, plus power to make it go.

But when you've finished, it sleeps four and can take a 100 hp outboard or I/O.

South Coast Seacraft, by the way, is at P.O. Box 1674, Shreveport, La. 71165, or see one locally at Darin Yachts, 942 N. Laramie, Chicago. Glen L. Marine Designs catalogs are available at many marine dealers, or write them at 9152 E. Rosecrans, Bellflower, Calif., 90706. Their catalog is $1.

Sharpshooters demonstrate skill at skeet tournament

Local residents who enjoy bird hunting and skeet shooting are in for a double-barrelled treat Saturday. John Satterwhite and Mike Fontana will be demonstrating their uncanny scattergun skills at the Palos Gun Club.

Their performance is at the end of the day's shooting competition of the Eddie Bauer Chicago Open Skeet Championships. The skeet championship is a three day event, June 21, 22 and 23rd.

Both the shooting demonstration and the skeet championships are open and free to the general public. The Palos Gun Club is at 7500 W. 119th St., Palos Heights. Both Satterwhite and Fontana are employees of Eddie Bauer Expedition Outfitter in Seattle.

The two men are said to put on an exhibition of skeet shooting that borders upon the unreal, breaking multiple hand-thrown targets, shooting from the hip and demonstrating the force of their charge by making juice out of oranges and sawdust out of blocks of wood.

Satterwhite shows incredible accuracy when he shoots off the tip of a cartridge, leaving the power and was intact. Fontana's prowess at shooting from the hip has been exhibited in numerous shooting exhibitions, breaking five hand-thrown targets from the hip before they hit the ground.

John Satterwhite, a Mississippian, has hunted bobwhite quail from the age of nine. His father raised English pointers as a hobby and John was kept busy shooting quail for the training of their twenty-three dogs.

In the United States Air Force, Satterwhite was taken on the road with the All Air Force Skeet Team. He toured the world and held the highest average in competition. He was 1968 All Armed Forces Champion and trained 20,000 men in combat firing as Air Force marksmanship instructor.

In 1969 he was a member of the All American Military Skeet Team, All American International Skeet Team and was the National Champion. Satterwhite holds the 1974 United States High Average (87.5).

While in the Air Force, Satterwhite became a member of the International Record Holding five man team with (400 of 500), won three Washington State Championships, High Over-All for 410 Bore and 28 Gauge and International. He also won the Idaho State International Championship in 1971.

Mike Fontana grew up in Washington State and hunted the Columbia Basin for 10 years. He is considered to be the best duck caller and the finest long-range bird shooter in the country.

Like Satterwhite, Fontana has worked in the capacity of field gunner for dog trainers. He is expert in riding a bird out to 40 to 50 yards then dropping it where the trainer wants it dropped. Fontana once had one run of over 100 pigeons without a miss and is capable of dropping flying birds shooting from the hip!

Fontana holds several championships. In 1971 he won the Washington State 20-Gauge championship, he captained the Sports Affiliated All-American International Skeet Team in 1972, and garnered eight titles, Washington State 12-Gauge champion, Washington State 410, 28, 20 and 12-gauge two man team championship, the Eddie Bauer Northwest Pacific Grand 12-gauge championship and the 12-gauge two man team championship in the Nationals. He also placed fifth in the 1972 12-gauge Nationals, breaking 492 targets without a miss.

Both shooters are 1973 12-gauge national two man skeet champions and both are members of the Sports Affiliated All-American International Skeet Team.

Baird and Warner leads by five

Baird & Warner added a half point to their lead over second place C. P. Floors in the Old Orchard Scratch League Friday. The 37-32 lead is the largest for the Realtors this season.

Bob Krohn led Baird & Warner, as he has throughout most of the season, with a 35. Mike Melchiorre was a stroke behind in the individual race, carding a 36 for C. P. Floors.

Ralph Ganzer fired a 37 for Bob Burrow Chevrolet and then six golfers were knotted at 38.

The team race is swiftly becoming a two-team affair. Sauganash Corp. is deep in third place with 23½ points, nearly 1½ behind the leaders and nine points out of second place. The competition for Titlist golfballs on the par three holes saw Tom Wallace clean up on No. 7 for the second time, dropping his shot closer than any other golfer. Marty Kolar was nearest No. 3, George Johnson No. 17 and Cliff Haemker on No. 14.

Village belatedly OKs 9.7-acre sale to park district

After a heated discussion, Buffalo Grove officials agreed to sell the park district 9.7 acres of unimproved land adjacent to Willow Stream Park.

The village board approved the sale Monday night, but only after defeating three previous motions. The park district last week voted to pay the village about $54,000 for the property.

The original motion to approve the sale was defeated when it failed to get a second. The board then defeated a motion that called for the village to refund about $45,000 that the park district already had paid to the village. Before returning to the original motion to approve the sale, the board defeated another motion which asked that the matter be tabled.

SEVERAL BOARD members reconsidered their position after Trustee James Shirley pointed out that the village had committed itself to selling the land to the park district last October. "The fact of the matter is the majority of the board indicated it would sell the property to the park district," Shirley told the board.

Following Shirley's remarks, Trustee Clarice Rech said, "I think the village has committed itself, I remember the discussion. I think the village should follow through with this sale because it led the park district to believe it would sell them the property."

The board then approved the sale by a 3-to-2 vote. Trustees Thomas Mahoney, who made the original motion, joined Mrs. Rech and Shirley in approving the sale. Trustees Randall Rathjen and Edward Osmon opposed the move.

IN VOTING AGAINST the sale, Osmon said, "I'd like to see the village keep this property. The village has need of additional land and I would like this tabled until it is determined whether we need this land."

Osmon was one of five board members polled last Oct. 15 that favored selling the land to the park district. Rathjen has opposed the sale all along.

Osmon said he was reluctant to approve the sale because he fears the park district will be unable to maintain the property. "They've (park district) said they don't have the money to take care of other property they now have," he said. "If we (village) give them this, it might be something else they won't be able to take care of."

PARK DISTRICT officials recently said there are no funds for further park development and will need another referendum to raise additional money. Park Board Pres. Joseph Settanni said last week the land adjacent to Willow Stream Park will remain unimproved until money is available.

Drainage ditch fence work under way

The Buffalo Grove Park District has begun erecting a fence around a portion of the open drainage ditch adjacent to Willow Stream Park.

The action was taken following protests from residents that the ditch is "an attractive nuisance" and hazardous to children in the area. More than 100 residents living near the park signed a petition that was presented to the park board last week.

David Roskelley, 650 Farrington Dr., told park officials the steep inclines and two to three feet of standing water pose a danger to small children. The ditch, he said, is a favorite play area for children.

THE RESIDENTS have asked that the ditch be dredged of silt and other debris to improve drainage and eliminate standing water. They also have asked that it be tiled and covered, or at least fenced to keep children from playing on it.

Park officials said Tuesday workers began erecting a snow fence this week that would keep children away from the most dangerous part of the ditch. Comm. William Kiddle said the fence will serve as an interim solution until more permanent measures can be taken to eliminate the dangers at the site.

Park Board Pres. Joseph Settanni said last week a fence was not the solution because children would climb over it to get to the ditch. Kiddle, however, said the snow fence will be extremely difficult for the youngsters to climb.

In addition to the fence, the park district will plant grass and shrubs along the ditch, as well as take other steps to halt erosion of the banks.

said he did not feel it was the village's responsibility to concern itself with what the park would do with the land. "That is within the realm of the park district's responsibility," he said. "The question the board should be concerned with is whether we want to sell them the property."

In approving the sale, the board directed the village attorney to prepare an ordinance transferring the property to the park district. The ordinance probably will be considered within the next several weeks.

Businessmen accept Dundee Road plans

Buffalo Grove apparently has won the blessing of local businessmen for its Dundee Road beautification program and will submit the plan to the State of Illinois for approval.

The village board met with representatives from a number of businesses Monday night to go over proposed revisions in the beautification plan. The plan calls for trees and grass to be planted on numerous islands scattered over the two mile strip which runs from Trace Drive to Cambridge Drive.

The Buffalo Grove Chamber of Commerce submitted a petition to the village board last week opposing the plan. At that time, board members agreed to meet with the businessmen to work out a compromise.

THE CHAMBER OF Commerce contended that the original plan, which called for a planted, raised median in some places, would hurt business, create traffic hazards, restrict business activity and development and pose a maintenance problem for the village.

Businessmen particularly were concerned that the high curbs would prevent cars from turning into shopping areas and divert shoppers to other areas that are easier to reach. Under the original plan there would have been openings in the median where motorists could turn left into shopping areas. Many businessmen, however, said there were not enough openings and motorists would be unable to get to some places.

The village has agreed to increase the number of openings and lower the median in some places to allow motorists to turn into virtually every business along the road.

THE REVISED plan must be approved by the state and federal government before it becomes reality. Village Pres. Gary Armstrong said he is not sure whether all of the changes will be acceptable to the state.

In some cases, the village has suggested the median be lowered near intersections and Armstrong said this may not meet the state's safety standards.

Don Wilson, owner of Northwest Marathon, 115 W. Dundee Rd., Arlington Heights, is one businessman who is not satisfied with the revised plan. The plan provides for no opening for motorists to turn left into his station.

Armstrong said, however, that the state planned to put a barrier median in front of his station even before the village suggested the beautification program. He said the village could not make the change and suggested Wilson contact the state and register a complaint.

ALBERT SIFRER, project engineer for the state, said last week the plan probably will be approved only if a near-unanimous number of businessmen approve it.

The Chamber of Commerce will obtain a copy of the revised plan and is expected to make a formal decision at its next meeting.

If the plan is approved by all the necessary parties, it would be implemented after construction on Dundee Road is completed.

Trustee Randall Rathjen opposed forwarding the revised beautification plan to the state because the village has not yet determined how much it will cost. Other board members, however, said the cost could be investigated after the state approves the plan.

Arlington agrees to sell bonds to help hospital

The Arlington Heights Village Board has agreed to lend its name to Northwest Community Hospital for the purpose of selling tax-exempt municipal revenue bonds.

Village trustees received assurance from two legal and financial experts Monday night that the plan to sell revenue bonds to refinance past hospital debts and buy new equipment would have absolutely no impact on Arlington

Heights' tax rate, bonding power or liability.

The bonds would be paid for exclusively by operating revenue from the hospital. But because they are municipal bonds and thereby tax-exempt, they carry a 2 to 2.5 per cent lower interest rate than conventional bonds.

Opinion survey shows only 1 of 21 returned questionnaires gives department bad rating

The Buffalo Grove Police Department apparently has a very good image with the residents it serves.

Police Chief Harry Walsh Tuesday said that of the 21 questionnaires returned so far in an opinion survey of residents' reactions to the police department, only one has been somewhat critical. In all, 50 questionnaires were mailed out about 10 days ago to people who had called the department for assistance.

Walsh said the one woman's complaint was that it took the policeman 20 minutes to respond to her call. Actually, Walsh said, the policeman in that instance was on the scene in about a minute but had dealt with the situation before talking with the woman complainant.

The policeman should have talked with the woman first, Walsh said.

WALSH SAID HE was very pleased with the results. This was the department's first such attempt to measure public opinion of its efficiency and image.

Other than the one woman, all who responded said service was prompt and efficient. Walsh said all who answered felt the police were neat in appearance and courteous. Several people, Walsh said indicated their contact with the police had enhanced their attitudes toward the police department.

As the first of the 50 questionnaires went out June 7, Walsh said, "any constructive criticism will be seriously considered. I really think some citizen input is possible." He said the survey was a means to find out areas in which the department could improve and to show "we really care about people."

The 50 residents were chosen at random and were involved in 50 consecutive calls for assistance received by the police department.

At least one couple overcome by fumes

by JERRY THOMAS

During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 58, and his wife, Verna, 59, of 20 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a serviceman Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors employed furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Rettenbacher, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Rettenbacher said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records that showed over 100 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Rettenbacher.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zetek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zetek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 6,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOMES WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Koswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

George Fiedler of Johnson Corp. said that in most cases, furnace parts have not been defective. He blamed the leaks on poor ventilation due to improper installation of the furnaces.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

"We are working on it in earnest and have the Centex-builders and Johnson Furnace Co.'s full cooperation," said Zetek. "When the homes in question were built, they were inspected by the FHA and so legally, I suppose, they are not our responsibility. But we have put ourselves in the position of attempting to help and resolve the problem," Zetek said.

THOMPSON SAID he had no idea until now that there was a widespread problem of defective furnaces in the community.

"Today, I can talk about it with some knowledge but that night I had no inkling and if not for the fact that my wife was restless and could not sleep, we might both be dead," said Thompson.

"That night I felt fine but tired and went to bed early and my wife, who had complained of feeling bad, stayed up sitting in bed," he said.

"She woke me and complained of feeling extremely ill. I got up, found my way to the bathroom for some water and on the way back began feeling sick myself," said Thompson.

"Now I know why. The fumes were high in the room and when I was in bed lying down, I was not breathing as much of them as Verna."

When his wife said she was unable to swallow the water, Johnson recalled, he knew something was seriously wrong and made an emergency call to the village fire department.

"I remember opening the door to the firemen and the minute one fireman walked in he said, 'I think I know what the problem is' and he walked straight to the furnace room," said Thompson.

"He told us later he had just bought a home in the village and found his heat exchanger was corroded exactly like ours was."

"I couldn't believe it and still don't understand how the previous inspection didn't show that or how the people who lived in the house before us could have lived there without incident," said Thompson.

THE COUPLE, who is childless, do not believe they have suffered any permanent damage from the fumes. Thompson said Johnson Furnace Co. provided a replacement heat exchanger at no charge and he only had to pay for the installation. Johnson has since ended its free replacement policy, blaming the problem on bad installations.

"I'm talking about it now because it could help someone else," said Thompson. "I had no idea the problem was so widespread."

One village official who has been aware of the problem is Trustee Ronald Chernick, 225 Brighton Rd. During a seasonal check at his home in the fall of 1973, a serviceman discovered a crack in the furnace heat exchanger.

The serviceman told him the furnace should be replaced, Chernick said. "I was worried they were trying to pull a fast one on me. I called another local repairman Wing and Rettenbacher to make another inspection," he said.

Wing and Rettenbacher verified that the heat exchanger was cracked and said it should be replaced, said Chernick. He complained to Centex but decided to have Wing replace the exchanger.

Chernick said he had been unaware of the widespread nature of the furnace problem in Elk Grove Village.

"In fact, when I had the repair work done I told the rest of the trustees about it and that's when about we really got wound up in the investigation," he said.

Chernick said he did not make the information public "so as not to alarm people until we found out exactly where the responsibility lies."

VILLAGE OFFICIALS, who expect results of a consultant's study on the problem in about three weeks, have offered free checks of heating systems by village inspectors.

Rettenbacher requested that residents who want their furnaces checked wait three weeks until the report is available. If the problem is urgent, he said, inspections can be scheduled before then by calling 439-3900.

The furnaces in which problems have developed are Johnson Corp. model numbers WAS-105, WAS-130, WTS-100 and WTS-125. Furnace model numbers are on the rating plate, usually located on the back of the unit.

Lawyers failing in case against Hart, judge says

by LYNN ASINOF

After two days of testimony, U.S. District Court Judge Abraham Lincoln Marovitz Tuesday told federal prosecutors that the government has not yet proved its conspiracy case against former Wheeling Trustee William Hart.

During a discussion at the bench at the end of Tuesday's court session, Judge Marovitz told assistant U.S. attorneys Howard Stone and Steven Kadison that from the testimony so far, "I would have to find him (Hart) not guilty, and he hasn't even testified yet."

Judge Marovitz said he sympathized with prosecution witness Bernard Wasmer, the alleged victim of an extortion plot involving Hart. The judge, however, said that in a criminal case, the government must prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. He said that testimony so far had not done so.

The judge's comments followed a full day's cross-examination of Wasmer by Hart's attorney, John Coughlin. Judge Marovitz also chastized Coughlin several times during testimony for asking repetitive questions and covering material irrelevant to the charge.

HART IS ACCUSED of conspiracy with James Stavros, former Wheeling Township Democratic committeeman, and William Bleber, former Wheeling building director, to commit extortion against Wasmer, owner of Duo Sign Co. of Wheeling.

The alleged conspiracy was intended to force the cancellation of an agreement between Hart and Wasmer signed at the time Wasmer purchased Duo from Hart in September, 1970.

For an extra $3,000 added to the purchase price of the company, Hart agreed not to engage in the sign business within 75 miles of Wheeling.

Wasmer Monday had outlined continuous harassment and threats from Bleber and Stavros after Hart, who moved to Florida in 1970, returned to Wheeling in late 1971. Hart later opened Nite and Day Electric Sign Co. of Wheeling in partnership with former village trustee Michael Valenza.

DURING MONDAY'S testimony, Judge Marovitz said the government had proved that a conspiracy took place and ruled that testimony about conversations between Wasmer and Stavros or between Wasmer and Bleber were admissible as evidence against Hart.

Stavros and Bleber, originally charged as part of the conspiracy, are no longer defendants in the case.

Under questioning Tuesday by Coughlin, Wasmer said he still fears that Hart might take measures against him. He said his fear of Hart decreased somewhat after he was led to believe that the former trustee would be indicted by a federal grand jury.

Hart, Stavros, Bleber and Valenza were among six past and present Wheeling and Cook County officials indicted Jan. 31 in a federal probe of shakedowns of Wheeling developers. Stavros, Valenza and Bleber have pleaded guilty to various charges.

Coughlin also questioned Wasmer at length on whether he was engaged in the electric sign business. Wasmer maintained that he did accept electric sign work, despite Coughlin's attempts to show that Wasmer did not belong to the proper labor union to do electrical wiring.

WASMER SAID that while he could not do electrical wiring, he could make plastic sign faces for electrical signs. Coughlin was attempting to show that Hart did not violate the agreement because his electric sign company did not compete with Duo's painted sign business.

After several hours of cross-examination, Coughlin's questioning evoked angry responses from Wasmer, who at one time pounded the witness stand with his fist.

Wasmer told the court he had always been in the electric sign business but electric signs were "suddenly out of my domain" after Hart returned from Florida. He said he then became afraid to tell anyone Duo could provide electric signs because Stavros, Bleber and Hart would put him out of business.

COUGHLIN ALSO tried to show that Wasmer did not suffer economic loss because of the alleged conspiracy. Wasmer admitted that no existing contracts were lost, but said future work promised him by Hollywood Builders, a local developer, failed to materialize as a result of the alleged conspiracy.

Coughlin attacked the accuracy of a diary kept by Wasmer between November 1971 and February 1972. Wasmer had used the diary Monday in recalling repeated threats and harassment he said were made by Stavros and Bleber.

The defense attorney at one point pulled a magnifying glass from his pocket to scrutinize the diary entries and questioned Wasmer about the depth of impressions made on the pages written by Wasmer.

At another point, Coughlin handed the diary to Wasmer to refresh his memory and in doing so knocked over a water glass on the witness stand, spilling the water on Wasmer. The courtroom erupted with laughter.

Cross-examination of Wasmer will continue today. Among the witnesses expected to be called in the bench trial are Valenza and trustee John Koepfen for the prosecution, and Bleber for the defense.

FAA tells safety standards for hang-gliding sport

Suggested safety standards for the fast-growing sport of hang-gliding, or sky-sailing, are being published by the Federal Aviation Administration.

FAA Administrator Alexander Butterfield said he hopes the new guidelines will be used by hang-gliding groups and that regulatory action will be unnecessary. He said the FAA will continue to monitor the growth and safety status of the sport to determine what steps might be needed to protect participants.

The FAA advisory circular on hang-gliding suggests that altitude be limited to 500 feet above the ground; that clouds be avoided; and that hang-gliders be kept at least 100 feet away from buildings, populated places or groups of people, without flying over them. The FAA also said there is to be no flying within controlled airspace, such as around airports, and no flying over prohibited and restricted areas without prior permission.

Hang-gliding manufacturers are also urged to develop criteria for materials and construction and to use quality control practices. Hang-gliding clubs are urged to establish training and safety programs and to coordinate activities with FAA officials.

Copies of the FAA circular, "Recommended Safety Parameters for Operation of Hang Gliders," will be available next month at the FAA field office at DuPage County Airport.

Suspected cat burglar sighted, scared away

A person suspected of being the cat burglar for whom Elk Grove Village police are searching was spotted and scared away early Tuesday morning.

Lawrence Needham, 350 Tonne Rd., told police he was awakened by a noise to find a man kneeling at the foot of his bed. Needham said he watched the burglar for a moment and then jumped out of bed.

The burglar, realizing he had been discovered, bolted from the room and out the front door of the apartment, taking Needham's wallet with him.

The only description of the burglar given by Needham, who called police at 4:45 a.m. to report the incident, was that he had dark hair. Needham said his wallet contained $160 in cash and some credit cards.

Police said they believed the burglar entered the third-floor apartment through an open patio door off a balcony. This is the second time the Eagles on Tonne apartment complex has been hit by burglars. Three other incidents were reported during the weekend.

Entry to the other apartments also were made through open patio doors. Kohnke told apartment dwellers to keep doors and windows locked and not be lulled into a false sense of security because the apartments are not on ground floors. He urged all residents to keep outside lights on, be alert and call the police at 439-3900 to report any suspicious actions.

Psychiatric care for two in obscenity case

Two unincorporated Wheeling Township residents, charged last March in an alleged pornography-prostitution ring, Tuesday were ordered to see a court psychiatrist. The hearing on the charges against the pair also was continued to July 16 in the Niles branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

Robert Boyer, 49, of 1210 Boxwood Dr., was charged with obscenity, indecent solicitation of a child and failure to buy a Chicago business license for his photo studio after police said they found more than a half-million photographs of nudes and sexual acts in his apartment.

Shortly after, Jack Klesert, 47, of 16 E.

Willow Rd., was arrested and charged with obscenity, being a keeper of a house of prostitution and felony pandering.

ACCORDING to Chicago police, who made the arrests with Cook County Sheriff's Police, Klesert operated a prostitution ring, supplying Boyer with models for his photo sessions.

Police said five witnesses were available in court Tuesday. Subsequent to the initial charges, Boyer was charged with one count of contributing to the delinquency of a minor and Klesert was charged with two counts of the same crime, police said.

Assistant State's Atty. Paul Perry, as-

Teen seized by police after chase, collision

A Hoffman Estates patrolman fired two warning shots and another gunshot late Monday night after a vehicle rammed his squad car during a brief car chase and escaped. An 18-year-old youth later was arrested on 11 charges.

Ronald Kotel, 106 Geronimo St., Hoffman Estates, was charged with four counts of disobeying a stop sign and one each of reckless conduct, fleeing or eluding a police officer, speeding, inadequate exhaust, leaving the scene of a personal injury accident, damage to village property and having no driver's license on his person.

The car chase began at about 10:55 p.m. near the intersection of Kingman Lane and Morton Street after a car was detected speeding, police said. The suspect vehicle collided with the squad car near the intersection of Flagstaff Lane and Washington Boulevard, about five blocks from where the pursuit began.

KOTEL WAS arrested at about 1 a.m. Tuesday after he went to the police station to report his auto stolen, authorities reported. The policeman, Richard Ricker, identified Kotel as the person involved in the chase after Ricker returned from Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, where he received treatment for a bump on the head, Police said.

Fire department cutbacks will help build new station

Several project cutbacks have been initiated by the Buffalo Grove Fire Department so that the new Dundee Road fire station may be built without a tax increase for residents of the Wheeling Township Rural Fire Protection District.

The most immediate cutback is the firemen's "sleeper" duty will not be expanded to every day of the week as had been planned. The program, in which some firemen are at the fire station all night long so that they can respond to emergency calls faster, currently operates Sunday through Thursday nights each week.

Expansion of the program may occur next year, Chief Wayne Winter said. Also to be delayed at least a year is the department's plan to buy a used tanker. Of the tanker, Winter said, "It would have been nice to have but we can put it off for a while." He added the tanker is not considered a necessity.

Delivery of the department's new fire engine, now scheduled for November, also is to be delayed as long as possible. Finally, only personal equipment — jackets and the like — that is "absolute necessary" will be purchased this year.

THE REASON FOR the cutbacks is the $52,000 the fire department has to spend this year for the purchase of the property on which the new station will be built. That money will come from the tax

Ricker clocked a car doing about 50 m.p.h. in a 20-m.p.h. zone on Kingman Lane. The suspect car failed to stop and continued west on Kingman Lane, and Ricker gave chase with his squad car emergency lights and siren going, authorities said.

The pursuit continued north on Washington Boulevard and then east on Flagstaff Lane. The suspect car then made a 180-degree turn in the road and headed at Ricker's squad car, police said. The two vehicles collided, but Ricker averted a head-on crash by turning his vehicle, authorities said.

After the impact, the suspect vehicle went on a parkway and nearby lawn and then continued south on Washington Boulevard, police reported.

RICKER FIRED TWO warning shots in the air and then one at the fleeing vehicle, police said. It was unknown where the third shot landed. The suspect car was found abandoned at the intersection of Washington Boulevard and Pleasant Street.

Damage to both cars was estimated at more than $100 each. The right front fender and radiator on the squad car were damaged.

Kotel was released after posting $1,000 bond. He is scheduled to appear Aug. 2 in the Hoffman Estates branch of the Cook County Circuit Court.

Village officials OK sale of eight former staff cars

Buffalo Grove officials Monday night approved the sale of eight of its former staff autos to a wholesale dealer for $4,800.

Capital Auto Sales, 3321 W. Odgen Ave., Chicago has agreed to purchase the autos for $600 each. The autos to be sold include four 1972 Dodge Polaras, three 1972 Plymouth Furys and one 1973 Dodge Polara.

In the past the village has traded the old cars at the time new ones were purchased. This year, however, village officials decided not to trade the cars because Grand Spaulding Dodge, the firm from which the new cars were purchased, offered the village only $330 per vehicle.

In an attempt to get a better price for the old cars, the village solicited offers from a number of auto wholesalers. Capital Auto sales offered the best price.

The village staff considered selling the cars at a public auction, but decided against it. They said that since some of the cars need repairs, auctioning them could create ill will between the village and those purchasing the cars.

Omni-House gets $800 for walk

Omni-House: Youth Services Bureau is scheduled to receive $800 in donations pledged by local residents who sponsored hikers last weekend in the first "Walk for Omni-House."

A group of 25 persons, most of them junior high and high school students, went on a 30-mile trek last Saturday through Wheeling, Buffalo Grove, Arlington Heights, Mount Prospect and parts of Lake County to raise money for the youth services bureau.

According to Cheryl Torok, Omni-House psychologist who directed the activity, about $250 of the money pledged has been collected so far.

The funds will be used to finance the many programs and services offered by the agency that serves Wheeling, Buffalo Grove, Arlington Heights, Prospect Heights and Mount Prospect.

Boyer is free on $3,000 bond and Klesert is free on $2,500 bond.

pital nearly $250,000 a year on an $18 million loan.

Dave Williams, an attorney with Chapman and Cutler bond lawyers in Chicago, said the proposed bond sale represented no obligation to the Village of Arlington Heights and would not affect either the village's debt incurring powers or taxes.

Under the ordinance passed Monday night, the village would take over technical ownership of the hospital for the life of the bond issue, probably 20 years.

But the agreement specifically holds the village harmless in any lawsuits filed against the hospital, Williams said, and the hospital will be required to carry enough insurance to cover all claims against it.

The ordinance does not actually sell the revenue bonds, but puts the village in a legal position where they can be sold in the future, according to Arlington Heights Village Atty. Jack M. Siegel. Besides Northwest Community Hospital, it authorizes village bond sales for any other hospital or nursing home, he said.

MUNICIPAL BOND financing for the hospital is possible because of Arlington Heights' home-rule powers. The practice has been upheld by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Even if the hospital were for some reason unable to pay off the bonds, the debt would not be transferred to the village, Williams said.

"A default would not be a default against the Village of Arlington Heights and would have no effect on the village," he said.

A financial adviser to Northwest Community Hospital from Smith Barney and Co., a Chicago bond house, said issuing the revenue bonds would not impair any other bonds the village might want to sell.

"The market place looks at these as separate entities," he told the village board. Nor will it affect the village's financial rating which determines interest rates on bond sales, he said.

Wheeling library to get new name

The Wheeling Public Library District will be known as the Indian Trails Public Library District, starting July 1.

The name change is scheduled to go into effect with the beginning of the 1974-75 fiscal year, said Kenneth Swanson, head librarian.

Swanson said the library board voted to rename the district to eliminate the geographical identification with Wheeling because the district also serves Buffalo Grove.

Would serve 4 townships

Alcoholism center funding requested

by DIANE STEFANOS

Federal revenue-sharing funds from four local townships will be requested to establish an area alcoholism outpatient center.

Roger Boekenbauer, a counselor for Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois, has been studying the disease in Elk Grove, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships for six months. He said he has found "many people in the suburbs with alcohol-related problems that need counseling and treatment."

Boekenbauer's proposed center would be operated by the Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois which has offered a similar alcoholic-drug dependence program at three Chicago centers during the past six years.

The organization is a nonprofit social services group that offers day care and care for the elderly and mentally retarded throughout the country. Although the organization is affiliated with the Lutheran churches of America, the alcoholism program is not.

BOEKENBAUER PLANS to request $15,000 in revenue sharing funds from each of the four townships for the funding of the program and center. The Elk Grove Township board is expected to consider the request for funds at its June 27 meeting. Other townships' mental health committees are still in the process of reviewing the program proposal.

Larry Walker, director of youth services for Schaumburg township said that he feels that there is a "definite" need for such an alcohol center in the Schaumburg area.

"In working with young people, I see the need for a service that just isn't available in our township," he said.

Walker considers the qualifications of Boekenbauer and other Lutheran Welfare Service staff members working with alcoholism to be "more than adequate."

BOEKENBAUER HOPES that township funds can be made available this summer so that the center can open in September. Boekenbauer has been conducting a preliminary alcoholic program in the four-township area since January to prove to township board members that there is a need for such services.

Patient fees, contributions and township funds would serve as the financial base for the proposed central out-patient clinic. These funds would be used to pay for staff salaries, rental space, utilities and printed materials, he said.

The proposed central clinic would have four staff members to serve all four townships. Boekenbauer said a location for the clinic will be selected and services will begin as soon as township funds are available.

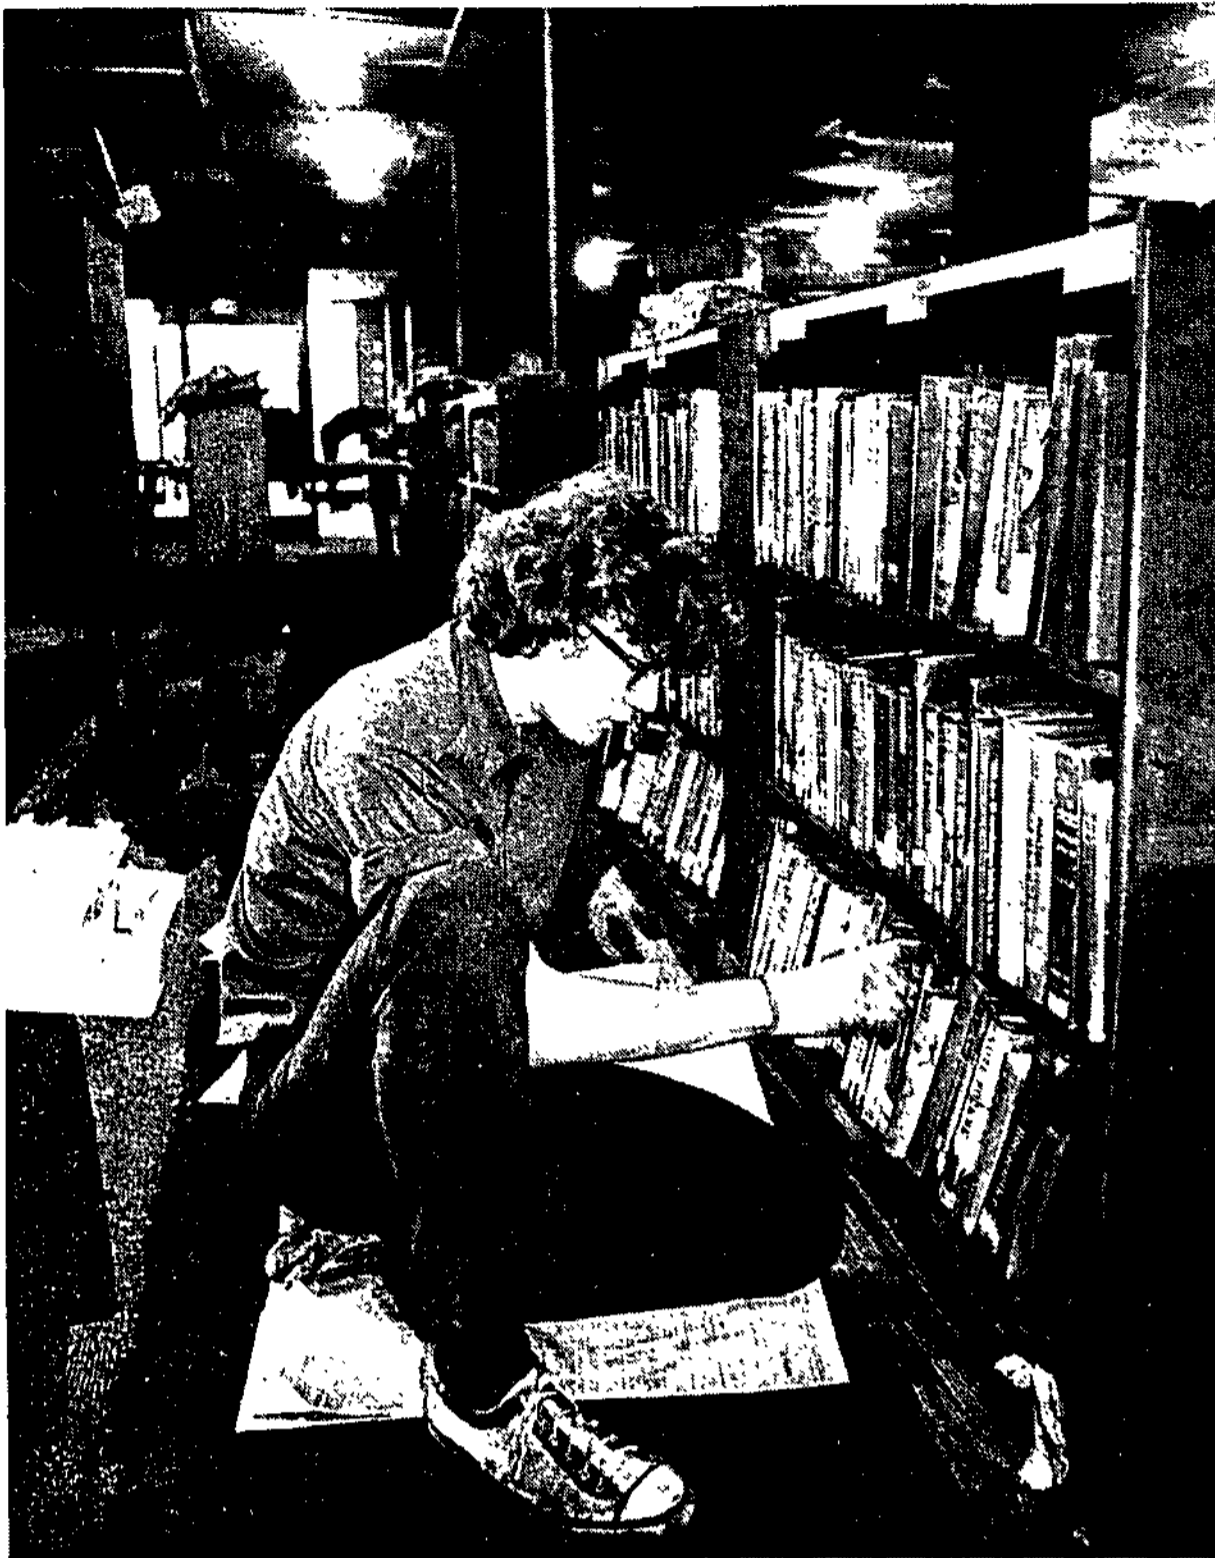

Officials won't predict new school taxes

by LUISA GINETTI

There appear to be as many questions facing officials in Dist. 23 as there are answers about the proposed 1974-75 school budget, and paramount among them is the effect the more than $2.491 million proposal will have on taxes.

Officials are reluctant to predict an increase or decrease in the school tax rate because a number of variables have yet to be determined before final budget figures are known.

Among the "missing links" in the budget are the amount of assessed valuation for the district, the status of funding from the state and the amount of money to be applied to the real estate multiplier, which is the figure used to

Cop back in hospital due to on-job injury

Buffalo Grove Patrolman Peter Lippert, injured last month while making a traffic arrest, will be rehospitalized because of apparent complications from those injuries.

Lippert allegedly was hit on the head at least twice by Michael W. Knaack, 22, of 111 Deborah Ln., Wheeling, while Lippert was attempting to arrest Knaack May 23. At that time, Lippert was treated for an apparent concussion and a bruised cheekbone and jawbone.

Police Chief Harry Walsh said Lippert's hearing and vision have been abnormal recently and he has had headaches and spontaneous nosebleeds. It is not known for how long Lippert will be hospitalized. However, Walsh said Lippert's doctor has ordered him not to work until after the hospital checkup.

Knaack, charged with aggravated battery and resisting a peace officer in the incident, is scheduled to appear Friday in the Arlington Heights branch of Cook County Circuit Court. There has been one court continuance in the case already.

Knaack had been a passenger in a car driven by Peter E. Pesche, 22, of 111 Deborah Ln., Wheeling. Pesche, charged with failure to obey a stop sign and transportation of open liquor in a vehicle, has had his court hearing continued to Aug. 6.

Supervision given for May 17 explosion

A 17-year-old Buffalo Grove youth, charged with criminal damage to property in a May 17 locker explosion at Buffalo Grove High School, was placed on a year's supervision Tuesday in the Arlington Heights branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

The youth, Tim Mastandrea, 114 Golfview Terr., was arrested the same day as the firecracker blast, which caused an estimated $300 damage. The explosion occurred about 8:15 a.m. when the school was almost empty, and no one was hurt.

Three lockers in Building C of the Dundee-Arlington Heights roads campus were damaged. The lockers were in the second-floor general locker area.

Surveillance system faulty

Schools may cancel monitor contract

The Dist. 21 Board of Education will consider cancelling a contract with the firm that installed an $85,000 surveillance system that still isn't working nine months past the completion deadline.

In January, the board threatened to take legal action against Temptron Inc. for failing to make the system function satisfactorily. The complex electronic system is designed to monitor schools and the administration building to prevent damage from fire and vandalism. Instead of placing the company in default in January, the board opted to hire a consulting engineer to determine the exact nature of the problems with the system.

Now school officials again are considering cancelling the Temptron contract and apparently feel the company will never be able to complete the job.

DIST. 21 Supt. Kenneth Gill said Tuesday attorneys for the district are studying the Temptron contract and will be present at a special school board meeting Thursday to discuss the possibility of suing the company. The meeting is set for 8:15 p.m. at the administration building.

If the school board decides to take that route, it would involve the performance bond posted by Temptron and request that the bonding company seek another firm to finish the job.

Gill said the individual components of the system appear to be functioning separately, but problems occur when the unit works as a whole.

The surveillance system consists of sensors placed in each of the 17 schools in the district, which are monitored by a computer in the administration building.

THE SENSORS are intended to detect heat and motion within the buildings and malfunctions in the heating systems. The problems are relayed to the central computer by electronic impulses, triggering alarms in the operations office where the console is set up. The person monitoring the computer then contacts the fire department, police or maintenance personnel to correct the trouble.

Gill said although the computer has reported some boiler failures at local schools in the past few months and prevented vandalism at Frost School in Mount Prospect two weeks ago, last weekend windows were broken at three different schools without detection. sidered before a prediction on taxes can be made.

The 1972 and 1973 tax levies in the district were $2.80 per $100 assessed valuation.

THE TENTATIVE budget, which reflects a substantial increase over last year's $2.2 million budget, includes several areas of increase. Included in the increases are a 9 per cent hike in administrative expenditures due primarily to salary increases; a 17 per cent increase in the instructional account due to teacher salary hikes, additional library material and additional staff; an increase of $4,575 in the amount for in-service training; an increase of $7,175 for new library books; an increase in the nurses budget due to hiring of an added staff member; an increase in custodial services of $10,000; an increase of $10,000 for the purchase of new textbooks; an increase of $3,000 in cafeteria salaries; a $3,600 increase in food supplies due to commodity price hikes; and a possible insurance rate increase accounting for an added $5,600.

The board is expected to approve a resolution at its meeting tonight calling for posting of the budget for 30 days as required by law. After the document is posted and a public hearing held, the board will take final action.

Library planning summer program

The Wheeling Public Library District is again planning to operate a summer program for children and adults in Buffalo Grove.

For the second straight year, a branch library will be set up at St. Mary's School beginning July 9. The library will be open from 12:30 to 4:30 p.m. each Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

A summer reading club for children in kindergarten through the sixth grade is planned that also will include story hours.

Also scheduled are craft classes, puppet shows and sports days featuring games and other competition for youngsters, according to Kenneth Swanson, Wheeling head librarian.

Swanson said the number of offerings for adults at the branch library will be substantially increased from the amount of materials available last summer.

Besides a selection of adult books, Swanson said there will be a "Consumer's Corner" collection of digests and product rating manuals and information on gas-saving short vacations.

Buffalo Grove residents will be able to use the branch facility at no cost.

Pupils' gift to help rebuild WHS library

The eighth-grade graduating class of London Junior High School, Wheeling, is doing its share to help rebuild the Wheeling High School library that was destroyed two weeks ago by fire.

The students donated $100 to the local high school as their "class gift" in promotion ceremonies last Friday night.

London principal Jerry Kiffel said the pupils raised the money through various student council activities during the school year.

Policy statements before school board

The Dist. 23 Board of Education will consider several proposed new and amended policy statements at a meeting today at 7:30 p.m. at the administration office, Palatine and Schoenbeck roads, Prospect Heights.

Included in the proposed changes are provisions to reimburse the partial cost of medical exams required for new teachers; partial reimbursement for travel expenses; a policy to allow students who do not meet minimum educational standards for receipt of a diploma to receive a certificate of attendance so they may enter ninth grade; a policy to withhold a student's report card for his failure to pay for lost or damaged school property, and a job description for the school nurse.

Minibike arrests planned by police

Buffalo Grove police plan to start arresting persons riding minibikes on private property along Lake-Cook Road.

The village has had complaints from neighbors that the bikes are noisy and are a safety hazard. Police in the past have been unable to arrest minibike riders because they were riding on private property and the owners of the land had not posted no-trespassing signs.

The police, however, has received verbal permission from the owners to post signs on the property. As soon as the village gets written permission, the signs will be posted and police will begin enforcing the no-trespassing law.

Three-fourths vote rule circumvented

Vacation of Center Street opens door for Superblock

by DOROTHY OLIVER

A swift political maneuver to vacate Center Street — an action necessary to progress with downtown redevelopment — was carried out at Monday night's Des Plaines City Council meeting.

Center Street was vacated by a vote of 10-5, unusual because Illinois law requires a three-quarters majority vote to vacate a street or alley.

But that's where the maneuvering came into play. Council proponents of Superblock, realizing they did not have the three-fourths majority needed, quickly put together an ordinance using the city's broad home rule powers to change the requirement to a simple majority.

VACATING THE street allows the city to turn Center Street into an ordinary piece of property which it can trade to the developer of Superblock for a piece of land of equal value.

The action started slowly at the meeting. When the controversial vacation ordinance was brought to the floor, Ald. Ewald Swanson (8th) made a move to table the motion. It was within the next hour that Superblock backers put together their home rule law, much to the displeasure of the development's opponents.

Despite a plea from a representative of Citizens for Common Good for aldermen to reconsider their stance on Superblock, and short, terse statements by objecting aldermen, the new procedure for vacating public streets and alleys was passed.

SUPERBLOCK backers were home free and the final votes came perfunctorily:

- The motion to remove the vacation ordinance from the table and put it on second reading was passed 10 to 5 with aldermen George Olen (2nd), Spencer Chase (3rd), Arthur Erbach (5th), Carmen Sarlo (6th) and Gerald Meyer (7th) voting no.

- The motion was made to adopt the ordinance to vacate Center Street and passed 11 to 4 with only Olen changing his vote to a yes.

- A sister ordinance calling for the vacation of a public alley on the Superblock site was removed from the table and also passed 11 to 4.

The more than 60 people attending the session, mostly members of CCG, seemed disgruntled and the crowd thinned as the final votes took place.

"I'm sorry we had to do it that way," said Mayor Herbert Behrel Tuesday. "I would not like to see the same thing done to me, frankly."

THE MAYOR admitted he had been the one who came up with the idea to push through the home rule ordinance and change the vote majority to ensure the passage of the ordinances.

"If I was told by (Corporation Council Robert) DiLeonardi that we couldn't have done that under our home rule powers I would have accepted that decision. But he said we could."

"If people want to criticize me for that, I guess I'll have to sit here and take my lumps," the mayor added. "I felt it had to be done to save the project."

Other aldermen contacted by the Herald Tuesday had little regret that the procedural ordinance was passed to facilitate Superblock.

HINDE SAID the ordinance was necessary not only to save the redevelopment project but because the state law requiring the three-fourths majority was "an unreasonable law."

"Vacating a street or an alley is certainly not important enough to require that type of a vote. I feel that the law should have been changed anyway. The time was right because here was a very important project that could have gone down the drain."

Hinde added that he felt "less guilty" about pushing the ordinance to passage because of the tactics displayed by objecting aldermen in the past.

Ald. John Selts (7th) said he favored the lesser vote majority. "I don't believe the minority should rule in something like downtown redevelopment. I've had some reservations about Superblock in the past and still do; but I've voted for it then and felt I had to continue doing so."

THE 1974-75 BUDGET provides for $7,629,602 in educational spending, a 6.6 per cent increase from $7,158,029 this year. The educational fund is used for professional salaries, program improvement, services, equipment and supplies.

Brieschke said the total expenditures in the fund could change since "no salary increases are reflected other than normal increment." The school board is currently negotiating 1974-75 teacher salaries with the Des Plaines Education Assn.

The new budget allots $5,049,549 for teacher salaries, an increase of about $250,000 from this year, and $297,064 for administrative salaries.

Changes in the educational fund budget are due to increased costs of materials and the loss of state aid due to a drop in enrollment, and increased absenteeism, according to Brieschke.

EXPENDITURES TOTALING $1,212,020 are budgeted in the operations, building and maintenance fund, a 14.7 per cent increase. The building fund covers costs of maintaining, improving or repairing school buildings and property. Also included are salaries of custodial and maintenance personnel.

Brieschke said the increase in the building fund reflects an increase in construction costs as well as maintenance projects planned for the 1974-75 school year.

The building program currently includes plans for an addition to the Chippewa Junior High School Instructional Materials Center and remodeling of the teachers lunchroom at Orchard Place School.

The 1974-75 budget also contains $625,212 for bonds and interest, $160,000 for transportation, and $146,445 for municipal retirement. This year's expenditures were $641,073 for bond and interest, $139,000 for transportation and $112,094 for municipal retirements.

SEVERAL PEOPLE attending the meeting questioned an estimate indicating the school district will have a cash balance of $2,846,186 in the educational fund at the end of the fiscal year. Jay Kuchel, an independent candidate in the April board elections, asked if the board "is going to continue with this type of surplus and still keep the tax rate the same." Kuchel said he estimates his taxes will jump by about 7 per cent this year.

Other residents asked why the cash couldn't be used for other items, including expansion of the remedial reading program in the junior high schools and tuition-free summer school.

Brieschke said the money is not a "real surplus" but early receipts of 1973 tax payments "in excess of $2.1 million." He also noted that the balance could change, depending on the settlement reached in the teacher contract negotiations.

BOARD PRES. James Kremers said that when people look at surpluses at the end of the year they have to "ask at what point is the money coming in. You don't always know how much money will come in prior to the start of the school year."

Kremers added that he didn't think the cash balance was "beyond a reasonable level."

"Our goal is to provide the maximum education we can commensurate to the Wider Superblock study urged

Calling on aldermen to "not charge ahead hastily," a representative of Citizens for Common Good asked members of the Des Plaines City Council to get a comprehensive study that covers the whole Superblock picture before approving redevelopment-related ordinances.

Robert Sullivan, a member of CCG, addressed the council Monday night on "some of the ramifications of the location of the parking garage proposed for Ellinwood Street, traffic problems, residential and school street impact and finances" created by downtown redevelopment.

"We're residents of Des Plaines. Most of us are homeowners," he said, adding the group was initially prompted to get involved because of remarks made by Ald. George Olen (2nd).

"We are concerned about the city today and in the future," he said. Sullivan painted a picture of future Des Plaines with a "two block long concrete block edifice along Ellinwood Street" (referring to the proposed parking garage), merchants driven out because of a lack of parking, a tower of wall-to-wall high-rise office buildings in the downtown area, condominiums where schools and churches used to be, a cloud of blue smoke rising from the traffic created by redevelopment and a mayor trying to explain "how we got into this mess."

SULLIVAN SAID the citizens group maintains that the city will operate at a loss of $30,000 per year if they commit themselves to the present Superblock plan. He said the group met with several aldermen for a work session recently and Ald. Richard Ward (8th) "gave us figures we could not receive from the city."

Despite Ward's information, however, the group still believed the city would suffer an annual loss of money.

(In a rebuttal to Sullivan's statement, Ward compared the citizens' group figure to several sets he supplied. His figures showed a minimum city profit of $9,000 and a maximum profit — counting money derived from Superblock which will go to other local taxing bodies — of $258,000.)

Sullivan also said the parking plans look good on paper but are insufficient for the proposed building. While city estimates have shown a need for 626 parking spaces, the citizens group believes the present city code is archaic and estimate a need for a minimum of 1,000 spaces.

Sullivan also said the retailers in town will "catch it first. We are deeply concerned that they may be hurt (by the lack of parking.)"

"The city will eventually have to go deeper into the parking business and we'll soon be talking about going into another parking garage half again as big."

Traffic flow in the central city is now "intolerable," Sullivan said. "Present plans have done nothing to alleviate the traffic problem and will only add to it. We have been told the solution to the traffic problem is to line the street with fences."

SULLIVAN SAID he realized the 1,000 signatures on the petition would probably not influence aldermen but would rather have them direct their attention to the issues and facts presented by the group.

"We are basically supporters of Superblock," he said. "We recognize the need to give life to the downtown area but we'd like you to pause long enough to gather the facts that are needed to make your decision. The city is operating in a quagmire of confusion with facts and figures thrown around haphazardly."

"We ask you to not charge ahead hastily but to get a comprehensive study that covers the whole picture."

Little change expected in tax rate

$9.8 million budget approved

The Dist. 62 Board of Education approved a 1974-75 budget totaling $9.8 million, a 7.2 per cent increase from this year.

The board gave final approval to the budget at its regular meeting Monday night. The public hearing on the budget was attended by more than 25 persons.

Business Mgr. Harold Brieschke said the tax rate for the district should remain the same and could drop by as much as 5 cents from the 1972 levy of $2.52 per $100 assessed valuation. He noted that some homeowners' bills might increase because of the quadrennial change in assessed valuation.

THE 1974-75 BUDGET provides for $7,629,602 in educational spending, a 6.6 per cent increase from $7,158,029 this year. The educational fund is used for professional salaries, program improvement, services, equipment and supplies.

"The one sticky area that remains is in the area of money items. We still haven't resolved that matter," he said.

The board negotiators will meet with DPEA representatives July 17 and "hopefully by that time we will get closer together," Kisten said. "We still have some work to be done."

Kuchel asked the board why negotiations are "dragging on so long," noting that many neighboring school districts had reached a settlement. Kisten said the demands "in other districts are different than in Dist. 62. A lot of the settlements are considerably lower than the demands here."

Village officials knew about faulty furnaces for 2 years

by JERRY THOMAS
During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 58, and his wife, Verne, 59, of 29 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a serviceman Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors checked furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Rettenbacher, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Rettenbacher said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records that showed over 100 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Rettenbacher.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zetek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zetek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 6,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOMES WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Keswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

George Fiedler of Johnson Corp. said that in most cases, furnace parts have not been defective. He blamed the leaks on poor ventilation due to improper installation of the furnaces.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

"We are working on it in earnest and have the Centex builders and Johnson Furnace Co.'s full cooperation," said Zetek. "When the homes in question were built, they were inspected by the FHA and so legally, I suppose, they are not our responsibility. But we have put ourselves in the position of attempting to help and resolve the problem," Zetek said.

THOMPSON SAID he had no idea until now that there was a widespread problem of defective furnaces in the community.

$485,000 roof-repair job for schools OK'd

Members of the Elk Grove Township Dist. 59 Board of Education have decided to fix all leaking roofs in the district despite the fact bids for the job came in more than $100,000 higher than estimated last year.

The board accepted low bids for the repairs at 18 district buildings, totaling almost $485,000. The board plans to pay for most of the work from the current year's budget with the rest to come from the 1974-75 district budget.

The job was originally expected to cost about $350,000 when a survey of district roofs was made last summer, but rising costs of materials shot the price considerably higher, according to Adolph Danta, director of buildings and grounds for the district.

THE BOARD had planned to pay for the job with some $400,000 in "unanticipated" state aid which the district received this year through the state-aid formula, the same formula which district officials predict will substantially cut aid to the district within three years. The board transferred the funds to the district building fund at its Monday meeting, approved a revised building fund budget for the 1973-74 school year.

The preliminary budget for the 1974-75 school year had included funds to pay for the majority of the roof repairs, so instead of cutting the amount from the budget entirely, the board will now use part of the money (about $100,000) to make the difference of the cost of the entire roofing project.

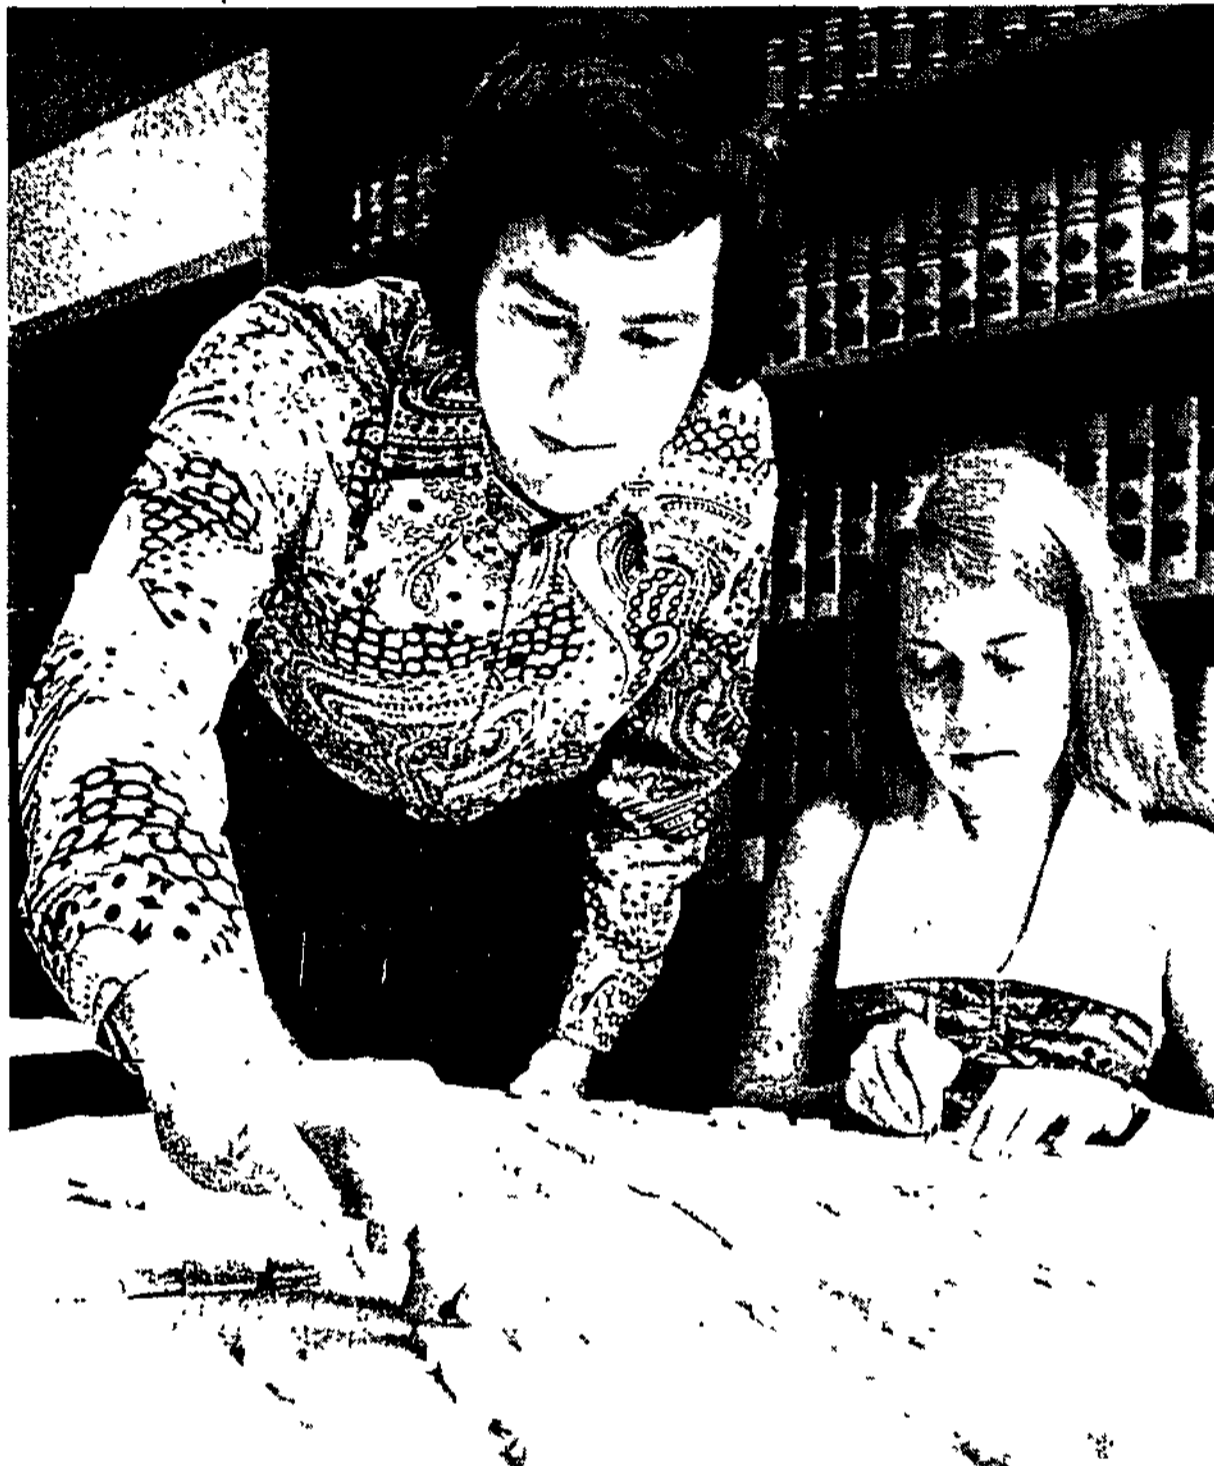

In other action, the board learned that Dist. 59, which had been in a "holding" status following a visit from a state evaluation team, has now been recommended for full state recognition, according to Supt. James Ervili.

"Based on good faith and their efforts so far, I have recommended full recognition to Springfield," said Hugh Creary, education specialist from the state Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. "I will go back to the district in September to make sure all things have been taken care of," Creary earlier told The Herald.

ERVILI TOLD THE board Monday night that he expects to hand Creary a detailed health program, among other things, because the evaluator was especially concerned about the lack of an outlined health program.

School board member Al Domanico chastised his fellow board members for their lack of reaction to the accreditation, compared to their reaction when they learned the district had not received immediate recognition. Domanico's remarks touched off a mild controversy among board members and Erwin Stevenson, assistant superintendent for instruction, Erwin Stevenson.

The board also approved 5 per cent raises for administrator's new contracts, as was earlier agreed by the board. A review of the contracts will be made again this fall following settlement of a controversy between district principals and Ervili. The board attorney, Frank Hines, also was granted a pay raise, from $30 to $34.50 per hour.

MAKING MODELS will be only one of the summer projects Dave Isley and Kathy Ingrish will tackle while working for Michael Richardson, Des Plaines director of planning and zoning. The two University of Illinois students are building a three-dimensional model of downtown Des Plaines as their first assignment.

Urban planning students try out 'real thing'

by STEVE BROWN

For Dave Isley and Kathy Ingrish, summer employment has been a cut-and-paste job, but they are hoping the warm weather work gives them experience that will lead to bigger and better things.

Dave and Kathy are working for Michael Richardson, Des Plaines director of planning and zoning, during the summer months and are learning first-hand what the job of city planner is all about.

Both students at the University of Illinois, they are studying urban planning and hope to make it a career. Dave will be entering graduate school in the fall and Kathy will begin her junior year.

RICHARDSON GOT them started in their summer job by having them build a three-dimensional model of downtown Des Plaines.

Later this summer, Dave said he plans to begin work on a population-forecasting project for the city. Kathy will continue on the model project and take some courses at Oakton College.

"I would rather be doing something important and worthwhile and be involved rather than just holding down a 9 to 5 job, once I get out of school," Dave said.

Kathy agreed, adding that she "wanted something different." "I believe the planning field is important and I am also interested in helping people."

BOTH THE STUDENTS noted the role of city planner is new and many people might not be ready to accept recommendations that are keyed to making a community a better place to live — both in the present and a decade from now.

"Some of our professors have talked about this a little, some say elected officials are willing to listen to their ideas, while others really aren't," Kathy said.

"I think the people will be more willing to listen to planners in the future," Dave added.

He sees his summer work as a stepping stone to a job with a group such as the Northeastern Illinois Planning Commission and work in the areas of pollution and the environment.

"THESE TWO AREAS seem to need a lot of attention. The future needs of many people are related to these areas," Dave added.

Kathy said she prefers communities like Des Plaines which have a large number of single family homes in residential areas.

The 19-year-old native of the community realizes, however, that attitudes seem to be changing away from this type of living, with more people moving into townhouses and condominiums.

Both of the students hope to avoid political conflicts once they start their careers, but recognize that some of their planning ideas may run into tough sledding in the political world.

"I guess you just have to do what you think is right and try to attack the problem from that point of view," Dave said.

Richardson said he intends to have his summer employees follow a zoning or plan commission case through the various channels necessary for city approval.

"It will give them a little real world experience to compare to their classroom work," he said.

$6,000 burglary reported at Wicke Avenue home

Burglars made off with $6,000 in clothing, jewelry and cash after forcing their way into the home of a Des Plaines resident, according to police Tuesday.

The burglars apparently broke in through a kitchen door at the home of William Marquette, 1003 Wicke Ave., Monday evening, ransacking several rooms.

June Marquette told police she left to go on a shopping trip about 5 p.m. and returned four hours later to discover the break-in.

Stolen were three coats, one a mink coat worth $3,000, along with $1,625 in cash and some valuable coins. Various jewelry, including rings, bracelets and watches also were taken.

A witness told police she noticed two men around the Marquette garage between about 5 and 6 p.m. One was described as about 35 to 40 years old, the other 19 to 22.

Two other residents told police someone tried to break into their autos outside residences on Holiday Lane.

Gia Tan, 1109 Holiday Ln., reported to police that someone entered his locked auto probably over the weekend, and stole $2 in cash. Also, a rear view mirror was ripped out of his car.

Police also said a portable radio worth $35 and four quarts of motor oil were stolen from a car owned by Michael Monday, 1115 Holiday Ln. The incident was reported Monday.

At least one couple overcome by fumes

by JERRY THOMAS

During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 58, and his wife, Verna, 59, of 20 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a serviceman Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors checked furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Rettenbacher, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Rettenbacher said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records that showed over 200 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Rettenbacher.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zetsek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zetsek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 6,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOMES WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Keswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

George Fiedler of Johnson Corp. said that in most cases, furnace parts have not been defective. He blamed the leaks on poor ventilation due to improper installation of the furnaces.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

"We are working on it in earnest and have the Centex builders and Johnson Furnace Co.'s full cooperation," said Zetsek. "When the homes in question were built, they were inspected by the FHA and so legally, I suppose, they are not our responsibility. But we have put ourselves in the position of attempting to help and resolve the problem," Zetsek said.

THOMPSON SAID he had no idea until now that there was a widespread problem of defective furnaces in the community.

"Today, I can talk about it with some knowledge but that night I had no inkling and if not for the fact that my wife was restless and could not sleep, we might both be dead," said Thompson.

"That night I felt fine but tired and went to bed early and my wife, who had complained of feeling bad, stayed up sitting in bed," he said.

"She woke me and complained of feeling extremely ill. I got up, found my way to the bathroom for some water and on the way back began feeling sick myself," said Thompson.

"Now I know why. The fumes were high in the room and when I was in bed lying down, I was not breathing as much of them as Verna."

When his wife said she was unable to swallow the water, Johnson recalled, he knew something was seriously wrong and made an emergency call to the village fire department.

"I remember opening the door to the firemen and the minute one fireman walked in he said, 'I think I know what the problem is' and he walked straight to the furnace room," said Thompson.

"He told us later he had just bought a home in the village and found his heat exchanger was corroded exactly like ours was."

"I couldn't believe it and still don't understand how the previous inspection didn't show that or how the people who lived in the house before us could have lived there without incident," said Thompson.

THE COUPLE, who is childless, do not believe they have suffered any permanent damage from the fumes. Thompson said Johnson Furnace Co. provided a replacement heat exchanger at no charge and he only had to pay for the installation. Johnson has since ended its free replacement policy, blaming the problem on bad installations.

One village official who has been aware of the problem is Trustee Ronald Chernick, 225 Brighton Rd. During a seasonal check at his home in the fall of 1973, a serviceman discovered a crack in the furnace heat exchanger.

The serviceman told him the furnace should be replaced, Chernick said. "I was worried they were trying to pull a fast one on me. I called another local repairman Wing and Rettenbacher to make another inspection," he said.

Wing and Rettenbacher verified that the heat exchanger was cracked and said it should be replaced, said Chernick. He complained to Centex but decided to have Wing replace the exchanger.

Chernick said he had been unaware of the widespread nature of the furnace problem in Elk Grove Village.

"In fact, when I had the repair work done I told the rest of the trustees about it and that's when about we really got wound up in the investigation," he said.

Chernick said he did not make the information public "so as not to alarm people until we found out exactly where the responsibility lies."

VILLAGE OFFICIALS, who expect results of a consultant's study on the problem in about three weeks, have offered free checks of heating systems by village inspectors.

Rettenbacher requested that residents who want their furnaces checked wait three weeks until the report is available. If the problem is urgent, he said, inspections can be scheduled before then by calling 439-3900.

The furnaces in which problems have developed are Johnson Corp. model numbers WAS-105, WAS-130, WTS-100 and WTS-125. Furnace model numbers are on the rating plate, usually located on the back of the unit.

DAN BYTNAR, 14, holds the letter of commendation he received from the National Safety Council for saving the life of a friend.

Yes, Dan, saving a life, certainly is a 'big thing'...

by FRAN SLIMMER

Dan Bytnar, 14, of Elk Grove Village, didn't think it was any big thing when he saved a friend from drowning in Cosman Lake, but the National Safety Council did.

The council awarded Dan a letter of commendation, which he received amidst a standing ovation at his graduation from Lively Junior High School last Friday.

Dan said he was "pretty surprised" by the award. His dad said Dan was in such a daze from the ovation he turned the wrong way after receiving his diploma.

THE LIFESAVING incident occurred April 17, when Dan, his girlfriend and another couple were canoeing in Cosman Lake in the village. They were 50 to 60 yards from shore when the wind rose and waves tipped the canoe over.

"We held onto the boat, then it started going down," Dan said. He thought he could swim to shore, he said. He used to be on Lively's swim team.

All four were fully clothed, but Dan took off his shirt and shoes and advised the others to do the same. He headed for shore and the others followed.

Dan's girlfriend and his boyfriend made it to shore, but Dan turned around to find the other girl, Rhonda Macro, "laying face down in the water" and wearing a heavy coat and shoes.

DAN SWAM BACK to get Rhonda, and she had recovered by the time they got to shore.

"We couldn't be prouder of him," Dan's father, Melvin Bytnar, said. "If he can think of someone else while he's in a situation where he's in danger himself, he's a better man for it."

Bytnar wrote to the National Safety Council upon the recommendation of a friend, a scout leader. Bytnar received a call from the council about a week ago, asking where he wanted the award sent.

He said he wanted to surprise his son and asked Fire Chief Allen Hulett to present the award "to add a certain amount of impetus." Bytnar originally wanted the award presented in Dan's class, but the school suggested having it done during graduation.

While the letter was to be a surprise to Dan, the ovation Dan received was a surprise to the Bytnars, who live at 238 Wellington. "The dynamic human warmth and love coming out of it blew our minds," Bytnar said. "It had us reduced to tears of joy."

Suspected cat burglar sighted, scared away

A person suspected of being the cat burglar for whom Elk Grove Village police are searching was spotted and scared away early Tuesday morning.

Lawrence Needham, 350 Tonne Rd., told police he was awakened by a noise to find a man kneeling at the foot of his bed. Needham said he watched the burglar for a moment and then jumped out of bed.

The burglar, realizing he had been discovered, bolted from the room and out the front door of the apartment, taking Needham's wallet with him.

The only description of the burglar given by Needham, who called police at 4:45 a.m. to report the incident, was that he had dark hair. Needham said his wallet contained $160 in cash and some credit cards.

Police said they believed the burglar entered the third-floor apartment through an open patio door off a balcony.

This is the second time the Eagles on Tonne apartment complex has been hit by burglars. Three other incidents were reported during the weekend.

Entry to the other apartments also were made through open patio doors. Kohnke told apartment dwellers to keep doors and windows locked and not be lulled into a false sense of security because the apartments are not on ground floors. He urged all residents to keep outside lights on, be alert and call the police at 439-3900 to report any suspicious actions.

Dems name woman, labor rep as conference delegates

Democrats from the 12th Congressional District, in a surprising vote, elected two Elk Grove Village residents to represent them at the National Democratic Conference in Kansas City next December.

Elected were the "running mates" of two Democratic party leaders who had been considered the most likely choices. The delegates will be Walter Williamson, a labor representative, and Julie Sass, who had the backing of most of the female "delegate electors" who participated in the balloting.

Williamson benefited from a large block of votes which he apparently attracted through an alliance with Herbert (Hub) Stern, chairman of the Lake County Democratic delegation, which had the largest bloc of votes under the weighted voting system used in the balloting.

Donald Norman

With 22,983 votes from Lake County, Williamson finished first among 24 candidates with 45,628 votes. Mrs. Sass, who had the benefit of all the votes also pledged to Donald L. Norman, Wheeling

Julie Sass

Township Committeeman and the other favorite in the race along with Stern, collected 35,172 votes to narrowly edge Norman for the second delegate position. Norman collected 34,662 votes. Stern, who attracted less than 5,000 votes from the Cook County portion of the congressional district, ran a poor fourth 26,913 votes.

Herbert Stern

IN A MOVE apparently engineered by

Stern, the voting was conducted by secret ballot. On a motion by Robert E. R. Fritz of Palatine the delegate electors first voted 29 to 25 to conduct the secret ballot, a move which was opposed by Norman and his Wheeling Township supporters.

State central Committeeman representative Daniel Pierce then called for a roll call vote on the secret ballot question, with each delegate casting his weighted vote. The secret ballot was decided upon with a total of slightly more than 45,000 weighted votes, very close to the number which Williamson received in the delegate election.

Midway in the balloting, Schaumburg Township Committeeman John Morrissey announced he was withdrawing his name as a candidate for delegate. Morrissey said that all 10 electors from his township had agreed to case their vote for Norman, although they could not agree on the second candidate.

MRS. SASS AND Norman received all 17,856 votes cast by the Wheeling Township delegation. In addition Mrs. Sass attracted seven of the 10 voters in Elk Grove Township, seven from Schaumburg Township and three from Palatine Township.

Stern and Williamson each received the entire Lake County vote, confirming reports that they had allied themselves in order to overcome what was expected to be a victory by Norman.

Williamson, however, received nearly unanimous support from Hanover and Elk Grove Townships, and attracted six of the 10 voters from Palatine Township, while Stern was able to claim only four votes outside of Lake County.

Would serve 4 townships

Alcoholism center funding requested

by DIANE STEFANOS

Federal revenue-sharing funds from four local townships will be requested to establish an area alcoholism outpatient center.

Roger Boekenbauer, a counselor for Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois, has been studying the disease in Elk Grove, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships for six months. He said he has found "many people in the suburbs with alcohol-related problems that need counseling and treatment."

Boekenbauer's proposed-center would be operated by the Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois which has offered a similar alcoholic-drug dependence program at three Chicago centers during the past six years.

The organization is a nonprofit social services group that offers day care and care for the elderly and mentally retarded throughout the country. Although the organization is affiliated with the Lutheran churches of America, the alcoholism program is not.

BOEKENBAUER PLANS to request $15,000 in revenue sharing funds from each of the four townships for the funding of the program and center. The Elk Grove Township board is expected to consider the request for funds at its June 27 meeting. Other townships' mental health committees are still in the process of reviewing the program proposal.

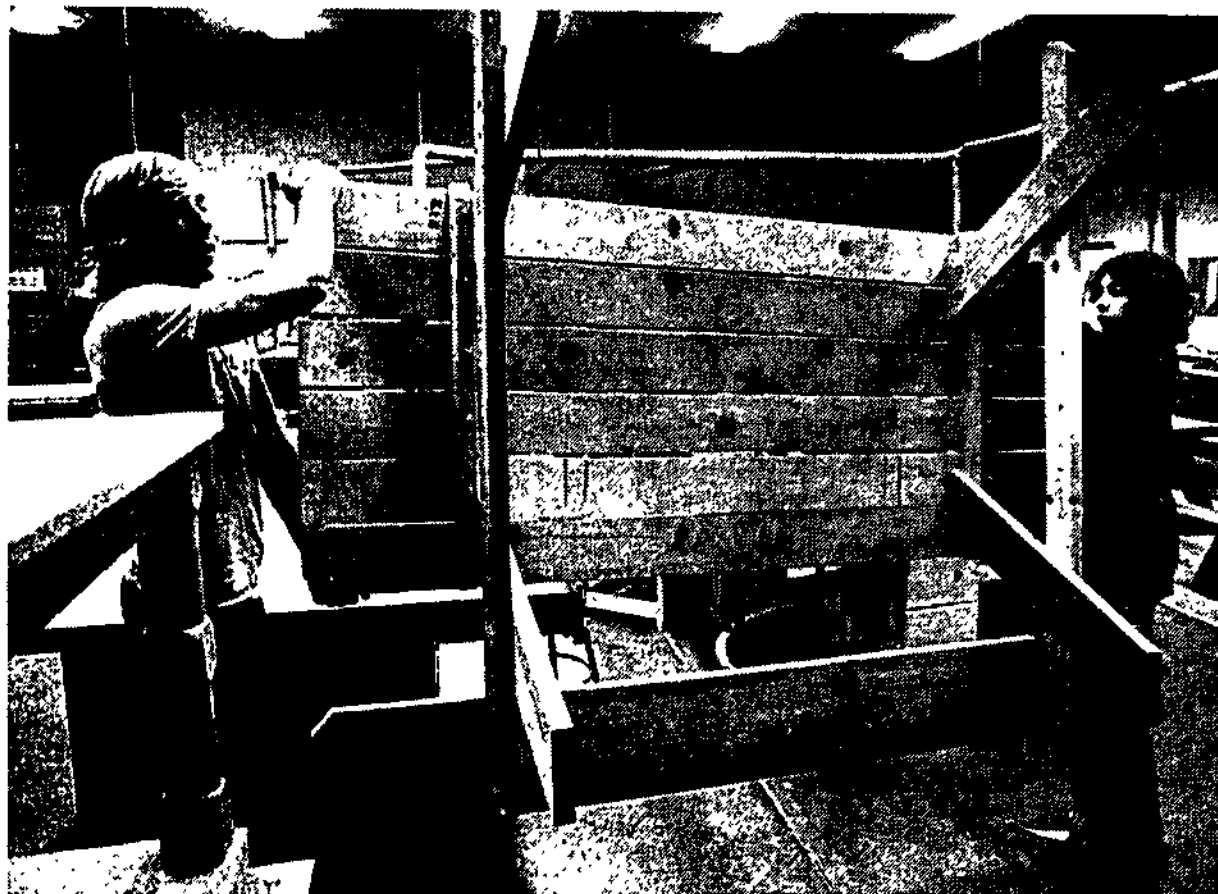

Larry Walker, director of youth services for Schaumburg township said that he feels that there is a "definite" need for such an alcohol center in the Schaumburg area.

"In working with young people, I see the need for a service that just isn't available in our township," he said. Walker considers the qualifications of Boekenbauer and other Lutheran Welfare Service staff members working with alcoholism to be "more than adequate."

BOEKENBAUER HOPES that township funds can be made available this summer so that the center can open in September. Boekenbauer has been conducting a preliminary alcoholism program in the four-township area since January to prove to township board members that there is a need for such services.

Patient fees, contributions and township funds would serve as the financial base for the proposed central out-patient clinic. These funds would be used to pay for staff salaries, rental space, utilities and printed materials, he said.

The proposed central clinic would have four staff members to serve all four townships. Boekenbauer said a location for the clinic will be selected and services will begin as soon as township funds are available.

NEW PICNIC TABLES for the Twinbrook YMCA day camp in Schaumburg have been built by students at Conant High School. Jim Stuckman and John Liautaud did much of the work on the eight tables and were helped in assembly by other members of shop classes at the school. In addition, student Bill Jacoby designed a shelter for the camp which will be built by a volunteer men's group. Randy Siemon designed the tables. The tables and shelter at the camp were destroyed by vandals.

Arlington agrees to sell bonds to help hospital

The Arlington Heights Village Board has agreed to lend its name to Northwest Community Hospital for the purpose of selling tax-exempt municipal revenue bonds.

Village trustees received assurance from two legal and financial experts Monday night that the plan to sell revenue bonds to refinance past hospital debts and buy new equipment would have absolutely no impact on Arlington Heights' tax rate, bonding power or liability.

The bonds would be paid for exclusively by operating revenue from the hospital. But because they are municipal bonds and thereby tax-exempt, they carry a 2 to 2.5 per cent lower interest rate than conventional bonds.

18-year-old arrested after squad car hit

A Hoffman Estates patrolman fired two warning shots and another gunshot late Monday night after a vehicle rammed his squad car during a brief car chase and escaped. An 18-year-old youth later was arrested on 11 charges.

Ronald Kotel, 106 Geronimo St., Hoffman Estates, was charged with four counts of disobeying a stop sign and one each of reckless conduct, fleeing or eluding a police officer, speeding, inadequate exhaust, leaving the scene of a personal injury accident, damage to village property and having no driver's license on his person.

The car chase began at about 10:55 p.m. near the intersection of Kingman Lane and Morton Street after a car was detected speeding, police said. The suspect vehicle collided with the squad car near the intersection of Flagstaff Lane and Washington Boulevard, about five blocks from where the pursuit began.

KOTEL WAS arrested at about 1 a.m. Tuesday after he went to the police station to report his auto stolen, authorities reported. The policeman, Richard Ricker, identified Kotel as the person involved in the chase after Ricker returned from Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, where he received treatment for a bump on the head. Police said.

Ricker clocked a car doing about 50 m.p.h. in a 20-m.p.h. zone on Kingman Lane. The suspect car failed to stop and continued west on Kingman Lane, and Ricker gave chase with his squad car emergency lights and siren going, authorities said.

The pursuit continued north on Washington Boulevard and then east on Flagstaff Lane. The suspect car then made a 180-degree turn in the road and headed at Ricker's squad car, police said. The two vehicles collided, but Ricker averted a head-on crash by turning his vehicle, authorities said.

After the impact, the suspect vehicle went on a parkway and nearby lawn and then continued south on Washington Boulevard, police reported.

RICKER FIRED TWO warning shots in the air and then one at the fleeing vehicle, police said. It was unknown where the third shot landed. The suspect car was found abandoned at the intersection of Washington Boulevard and Pleasant Street.

Damage to both cars was estimated at more than $100 each. The right front fender and radiator on the squad car were damaged.

FAA tells safety standards for hang-gliding sport

Suggested safety standards for the fast-growing sport of hang-gliding, or sky-sailing, are being published by the Federal Aviation Administration.

FAA Administrator Alexander Butterfield said he hopes the new guidelines will be used by hang-gliding groups and that regulatory action will be unnecessary. He said the FAA will continue to monitor the growth and safety status of the sport to determine what steps might be needed to protect participants.

The FAA advisory circular on hang-gliding suggests that altitude be limited to 500 feet above the ground; that clouds be avoided, and that hang-gliders be kept at least 100 feet away from buildings, populated places or groups of people, without flying over them. The FAA also said there is to be no flying within controlled airspace, such as around airports, and no flying over prohibited and restricted areas without prior permission.

Hang-glider manufacturers are also urged to develop criteria for materials and construction and to use quality control practices. Hang-gliding clubs are urged to establish training and safety programs and to coordinate activities with FAA officials.

Copies of the FAA circular, "Recommended Safety Parameters for Operation of Hang Gliders," will be available next month at the FAA field office at DuPage County Airport.

Plan commission hears details

Big residential, commercial area planned SW of village

Plans for a major residential and commercial development on a 365-acre tract southwest of Palatine were unveiled at the Palatine Plan Commission meeting Tuesday.

Approximately 100 residents from the surrounding area attended the meeting to hear the plans and ask questions.

L. F. Draper and Associates is asking for annexation of 128 acres immediately south of the Hunting Ridge subdivision to the village and approval of a plan for the residential development of the entire parcel known as the Brandt property.

The parcel is irregularly shaped with 237 acres southeast of Illinois Avenue and Quentin Road and the rest bounded by Hunting Ridge subdivision on the north, Harper College on the south, Roselle Road on the west and Quentin Road on the east.

OF THE TOTAL acreage, 89.5 acres are proposed for single-family homes, 112.8 acres for multiple-unit buildings, 35.5 acres for commercial use and 85.5 acres for water retention and green area. The remaining property would be occupied by roads.

The proposed development, called Plum Grove Hills would have a total of 2,800 dwelling units for a density of 7.67 units per acre.

Plans call for 863 single-family homes with two to four bedrooms to be constructed on the periphery of the property to blend with neighboring subdivisions of Hunting Ridge and Pleasant Hill.

The higher density residential use would not exceed three-story buildings. Sale price for the dwelling units are expected to run from $70,000 for a single-family home to $30,000 for condominium unit. No rental units are planned.

Four commercial sites are proposed to serve the development and surrounding area. The commercial use would include a five-acre gourmet restaurant on the northeast corner of Roselle Road and Euclid Avenue extended and a cluster of commercial uses including a 14-acre shopping center at Euclid Avenue extended and Quentin Road.

CLUBHOUSES for recreation are proposed in addition to four lakes for water retention. The eastern boundary of the property is flood plain and will remain green area.

Lou Draper, developer, indicated he would offer the green area and a lake to the Palatine Park District but if it did not accept the land, it would be maintained by a homeowners' association.

Several road projects were proposed by Paul C. Box, a traffic engineer to accommodate the increased traffic from the project.

POPULATION OF the entire project is estimated at 6,500 with nearly 750 elementary age children. Draper has indicated he will donate a school site to Palatine-Rolling Meadows Dist. 15.

Construction of the entire project, if approved, will take five to seven years, according to Draper. He indicated the single-family homes on the northern boundary and multiple units near Harper would be developed first.

Arlington agrees to sell bonds to help hospital

The Arlington Heights Village Board has agreed to lend its name to Northwest Community Hospital for the purpose of selling tax-exempt municipal revenue bonds.

Village trustees received assurance from two legal and financial experts Monday night that the plan to sell revenue bonds to refinance past hospital debts and buy new equipment would have absolutely no impact on Arlington Heights' tax rate, bonding power or liability.

The bonds would be paid for exclusively by operating revenue from the hospital. But because they are municipal bonds and thereby tax-exempt, they carry a 2 to 2.5 per cent lower interest rate than conventional bonds.

THE DIFFERENCE will save the hospital nearly $250,000 a year on an $18 million loan.

Dave Williams, an attorney with Chapman and Cutler bond lawyers in Chicago, said the proposed bond sale represented no obligation to the Village of Arlington Heights and would not affect either the village's debt incurring powers or taxes.

Under the ordinance passed Monday night, the village would take over technical ownership of the hospital for the life of the bond issue, probably 20 years.

But the agreement specifically holds the village harmless in any lawsuits filed against the hospital, Williams said, and the hospital will be required to carry enough insurance to cover all claims against it.

The ordinance does not actually sell the revenue bonds, but puts the village in a legal position where they can be sold in the future, according to Arlington Heights Village Atty. Jack M. Siegel. Besides Northwest Community Hospital, it authorizes village bond sales for any other hospital or nursing home, he said.

MUNICIPAL BOND financing for the hospital is possible because of Arlington Heights' home-rule powers. The practice has been upheld by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Even if the hospital were for some reason unable to pay off the bonds, the debt would not be transferred to the village, Williams said.

"A default would not be a default against the Village of Arlington Heights and would have no effect on the village," he said.

a nice day too, and would have been perfect if it wasn't for that darn leash attached to the meter.

Fire station addition: $45,000 more

The addition to the Colfax Street Fire Station will cost the village approximately $45,000 more than the original estimate of $228,000.

Bids for the fire station addition were opened by the village board Monday. No bids were accepted by the board but the low bids for the addition total $243,490, not including architectural fees (7 per cent of the total cost), furniture and radio equipment.

The bids have been referred to the administration, finance and legislation and health, safety and welfare committees of the board for review at a joint meeting at 7 p.m. today in the village hall, 54 S. Brockway St.

THREE BIDS WERE received for general construction of the fire station addition. They were Oscar J. Berge, Glenview, $167,800; Ilce Construction Co., Chicago, $199,609, and E. C. Dayer, Waukegan, $207,611.

Bids on electrical work were Lid Electric Inc., $29,875, and Mid America Electric Co., $39,955.

Plumbing bids were J. C. Magee Plumbing and Heating, $19,000, and Frank Saville Plumbing, $23,700.

Bids on heating and air conditioning were Do-All Sheet Metal Inc., $26,815, and Division Air Conditioning and Heating, $27,873.

The fire station addition will be financed for a $335,000 general obligation bond issue recently sold by the board.

ARCHITECTURAL PLANS call for a two-story addition with three bay areas for vehicles and living quarters on the second floor. The addition would be located south of the present fire station on the southeast corner of Hale and Colfax streets.

Also proposed is the remodeling of existing living quarters at the fire station for use as administrative offices.

The Colfax street station was opened in 1960. This will be the first addition to the original structure. Land for the addition was purchased by the village in 1972 at a cost of $27,500.

Annex proposed Ramada Inn site to village

The proposed site of a Ramada Inn at Northwest Highway and Quentin Road has been annexed to the Village of Palatine removing the final obstacle to construction of the hotel.

The Palatine Village Board on Monday unanimously approved the annexation of the 3.75-acre site where Uncle Andy's Cow Palace is now located and three other parcels along Quentin Road.

A preannexation agreement between the village and John Bakos, owner of the property, permits construction of the Ramada Inn in accordance with village building codes.

Residents of Lake Park Estates, who successfully blocked construction of the hotel in unincorporated Palatine Township, have indicated they may file a lawsuit in an attempt to block the construction in the village.

THE RESIDENTS argued Monday that the village should conduct a new series of public hearings on the Ramada Inn project prior to issuing building permits. They contend that the property is annexed to the village as single-family residential, and public hearings must be held on other uses despite previous agreements.

Construction plans call for a four-story motel with 166 rooms and a one-story commercial building housing managerial offices, banquet facilities and a restaurant.

A second phase of the development calls for tearing down Uncle Andy's Cow Palace and constructing a one-story office building with underground parking.

Lake Park Estate homeowners immediately north and northeast of the Ramada Inn site have argued construction of the hotel will result in depreciation of their property values.

Architectural plans call for low-intensity lighting, landscaping with buffer zones for abutting residential homeowners and provisions for water retention.

Bakos has indicated he hopes to have construction under way by August, with completion in one year.

At least one couple overcome by fumes

by JERRY THOMAS

During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 58, and his wife, Verna, 59, of 20 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a serviceman Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors checked furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Reitenbach, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Reitenbach said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records that showed over 100 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Reitenbach.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zetek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zetek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 6,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOMES WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Keswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

George Fiedler of Johnson Corp. said that in most cases, furnace parts have not been defective. He blamed the leaks on poor ventilation due to improper installation of the furnaces.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

"We are working on it in earnest and have the Centex builders and Johnson Furnace Co.'s full cooperation," said Zetek. "When the homes in question were built, they were inspected by the FHA and so legally, I suppose, they are not our responsibility. But we have put ourselves in the position of attempting to help and resolve the problem," Zetek said.

THOMPSON SAID he had no idea until now that there was a widespread problem of defective furnaces in the community.

"Today, I can talk about it with some knowledge but that night I had no inkling and if not for the fact that my wife was restless and could not sleep, we might both be dead," said Thompson.

"That night I felt fine but tired and went to bed early and my wife, who had complained of feeling bad, stayed up sitting in bed," he said.

"She woke me and complained of feeling extremely ill. I got up, found my way to the bathroom for some water and on the way back began feeling sick myself," said Thompson.

"Now I know why. The fumes were high in the room and when I was in bed lying down, I was not breathing as much of them as Verna."

When his wife said she was unable to swallow the water, Johnson recalled, he knew something was seriously wrong and made an emergency call to the village fire department.

"I remember opening the door to the firemen and the minute one fireman walked in he said, 'I think I know what the problem is' and he walked straight to the furnace room," said Thompson.

"He told us later he had just bought a home in the village and found his heat exchanger was corroded exactly like ours was."

"I couldn't believe it and still don't understand how the previous inspection didn't show that or how the people who lived in the house before us could have lived there without incident," said Thompson.

THE COUPLE, who is childless, do not believe they have suffered any permanent damage from the fumes. Thompson said Johnson Furnace Co. provided a replacement heat exchanger at no charge and he only had to pay for the installation. Johnson has since ended its free replacement policy, blaming the problem on bad installations.

"I'm talking about it now because it could help someone else," said Thompson. "I had no idea the problem was so widespread."

Village board wrapup

Five new electrical commissioners

Five appointments to the Palatine Electrical Commission were approved by the Palatine Village Board Monday.

Reappointed to the six-member commission for one-year terms were: Jerry C. Chang of Northbrook, a professional engineer; Orville Helms, 203 N. Benton St., Palatine, fire chief; James D. Medek, 117 Imperial Ct., Palatine, distribution engineer with Commonwealth Edison Co., and Jerry Salemi of Long Grove, an electrical contractor.

Henry (Pete) Apida, 105 E. Daniels St., Palatine, the village building and zoning director, was also appointed. One vacancy remains on the commission.

Apartment zoning OKd

The rezoning of a parcel on the southwest corner of Wood and Cedar streets to permit construction of a small apartment building was approved by the Palatine Village Board on Monday.

Rudolf Lenkelt, owner of the property, plans to construct a two-story apartment building with four two-bedroom units on the property. The building is expected to cost approximately $140,000 to construct and the apartment units would rent for about $400 a month.

There were no objections from surrounding property owners to the rezoning.

Sewer bids opened

Bids for the relocation of two sanitary sewers were opened by the Palatine Village Board on Monday.

Three bids were received for the relocation of the Rohlfing Road sanitary sewer at Salt Creek. They were: W. H. Lyman Construction Co., $7,210; Rosetti Contracting Co., $5,896; and Scully, Hunter and Scully, $9,290.32.

Bids on the relocation of the Hellen Road sanitary sewer at Salt Creek were: W. H. Lyman Construction Co., $30,457.70; and Scully, Hunter and Scully, $47,113.05.

The sanitary sewer relocations are necessary because the sewers are washing out and need to be reinforced.

The bids have been referred to the board's administration, finance and legislation committee for study at its 7 p.m. Wednesday meeting at village hall, 54 S. Brockway St. The committee is expected to make its recommendation to the board next Monday.

Village renews contract

The annual engineering contract with Consoer, Townsend and Associates of Chicago has been renewed by the Palatine Village Board.

The board recently approved the establishment of a village engineering department but will continue to use Consoer, Townsend and Associates for large engineering projects.

The village engineering department will be staffed by a civil engineer, draftsman, engineering inspector and secretary. The department will handle the village's daily engineering problems.

Village Pres. Wendell E. Jones said he felt the village was several years away from being able to staff an engineering department to take care of all the village's engineering problems.

Increase road funding

Palatine's maintenance contract with the Illinois Highway Department for the maintenance of state roads within the village has been increased from $23,000 to $32,000 this year.

Palatine will receive the additional funds mainly because of the large amount of maintenance work necessary on Northwest Highway.

Surplus wagon for sale

A 25-year-old Palatine Fire Department vehicle has been labeled "unwanted surplus" and will be sold or donated to the Palatine Park District.

The Palatine Village Board has authorized Village Mgr. Anton H. Harwig to offer the 1948 water wagon vehicle to the park district or solicit bids for the sale of the wagon.

A petition to relocate the entrance gates to the Kennilwicke subdivision on Hicks Road right of way is being considered by the Palatine Village Board.

The homeowners' association asked permission to relocate the gates presently on Juniper Drive east because of the widening of Hicks Road. The matter has been referred to a joint committee of the board's streets and traffic and communication and public relations committees for review.

The homeowners have also asked for the village's help in getting Morwell Builders to cut the grass on existing models, cut weeds on vacant lots, remove an abandoned truck and construction material and improve the curbing on Juniper. These matters are being handled administratively by the village.

Beer tent requested

A beer tent may be one of the highlights at the Downtown Palatine Merchants' "Sidewalk Days" on July 24-27.

Timothy C. Clifford, owner of Dirty Nellie's West Irish Pub, 55 Bothwell St., has requested permission to put up a beer tent in the village parking lot during the sidewalk days.

The Palatine Village Board has referred the request to a joint committee of the streets and traffic and communication and public relations committees for review.

Decision to purchase new school books expected today

A final decision on the purchase of new books for the math, language arts and health programs is expected at tonight's Palatine-Rolling Meadows Dist. 15 Board of Education meeting.

No cost estimates on the prices were available Tuesday. Joann Newman, division director for curriculum implementation, said the district is still negotiating with the publishers on specific costs.

The new elementary books for first through sixth grades, technically approved during a budget discussion earlier this year, will concentrate on problem solving and drop much of the difficult "modern math" terminology, according to school district officials.

Final approval is also expected on supplementary math books for the elementary grades. These will be purchased in limited quantities and used in addition to the regular text in all Dist. 15 elementary schools next year.

SOME JUNIOR HIGH school students may also have new math books next fall. Approval is being sought to pilot the same textbook series being purchased for the elementary grades. Under a pilot program, the new textbooks are introduced in a few of the Dist. 15 classes. If the program is successful, it will be expanded to include all schools.

Two supplementary math series are also expected to be piloted in the junior highs.

All nine of the new language arts series being suggested for elementary and junior high schools next year show more emphasis on the basics of grammar instead of creativity, according to school officials.

FIVE SERIES ARE expected to be tried out in 12 of the 16 elementary schools next fall. Also being considered is a drama program for the elementary students. A drama program has already been instituted in the junior high schools.

The junior high school language arts recommendations are for four different series. If all four sets are adopted after a pilot study is completed next spring, each set will be split between four teachers.

The new health books are being purchased for grades one through eight. They include recent health information and sections on bike and bus safety, according to school officials.

The books even show the new way of brushing teeth, which is simply the older way restated, according to Myrae Rundle, division director for curriculum planning and development. The "new way" of brushing your teeth is from side to side, instead of up and down.

Would serve 4 townships

Alcoholism center funding requested

by DIANE STEFANOS

Federal revenue-sharing funds from four local townships will be requested to establish an area alcoholism outpatient center.

Roger Boekenhauer, a counselor for Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois, has been studying the disease in Elk Grove, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships for six months. He said he has found "many people in the suburbs with alcohol-related problems that need counseling and treatment."

Boekenhauer's proposed-center would be operated by the Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois which has offered a similar alcoholic-drug dependence program at three Chicago centers during the past six years.

The organization is a nonprofit social services group that offers day care and care for the elderly and mentally retarded throughout the country. Although the organization is affiliated with the Lutheran churches of America, the alcoholism program is not.

BOEKENHAUER PLANS to request $15,000 in revenue sharing funds from each of the four townships for the funding of the program and center. The Elk Grove Township board is expected to consider the request for funds at its June 27 meeting. Other townships' mental health committees are still in the process of reviewing the program proposal.

Larry Walker, director of youth services for Schaumburg township said that he feels that there is a "definite" need for such an alcohol center in the Schaumburg area.

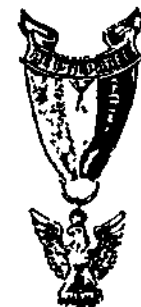

"In working with young people, I see the need for a service that just isn't available in our township," he said.

Walker considers the qualifications of Boekenhauer and other Lutheran Welfare Service staff members working with alcoholism to be "more than adequate."

BOEKENHAUER HOPES that township funds can be made available this summer so that the center can open in September. Boekenhauer has been conducting a preliminary alcoholic program in the four-township area since January to prove to township board members that there is a need for such services.

Patient fees, contributions and township funds would serve as the financial base for the proposed central outpatient clinic. These funds would be used to pay for staff salaries, rental space, utilities and printed materials, he said.

The proposed central clinic would have four staff members to serve all four townships. Boekenhauer said a location for the clinic will be selected and services will begin as soon as township funds are available.

Dems name woman, labor rep as conference delegates

Democrats from the 12th Congressional District, in a surprising vote, elected two Elk Grove Village residents to represent them at the National Democratic Conference in Kansas City next December.

Elected were the "running mates" of two Democratic party leaders who had been considered the most likely choices. The delegates will be Walter Williamson, a labor representative, and Julie Sass, who had the backing of most of the female "delegate electors" who participated in the balloting.

Williamson benefited from a large block of votes which he apparently attracted through an alliance with Herbert (Hub) Stern, chairman of the Lake County Democratic delegation, which had the largest bloc of votes under the weighted voting system used in the balloting.

Donald Norman

Julie Sass

Herbert Stern

With 22,983 votes from Lake County, Williamson finished first among 24 candidates with 45,828 votes. Mrs. Sass, who had the benefit of all the votes also pledged to Donald L. Norman, Wheeling

Township Committeeman and the other favorite in the race along with Stern, collected 35,172 votes to narrowly edge Norman for the second delegate position. Norman collected 34,662 votes. Stern, who attracted less than 5,000 votes from the Cook County portion of the congressional district, ran a poor fourth 26,913 votes.

IN A MOVE apparently engineered by

Stern, the voting was conducted by secret ballot. On a motion by Robert E. R. Fritz of Palatine the delegate electors first voted 29 to 25 to conduct the secret ballot, a move which was opposed by Norman and his Wheeling Township supporters.

State central Committeeman representative Daniel Pierce then called for a roll call vote on the secret ballot question, with each delegate casting his weighted vote. The secret ballot was decided upon with a total of slightly more than 45,000 weighted votes, very close to the number which Williamson received in the delegate election.

Midway in the balloting, Schaumburg Township Committeeman John Morrissey announced he was withdrawing his name as a candidate for delegate. Morrissey said that all 10 electors from his township had agreed to cast their vote for Norman, although they could not agree on the second candidate.

MRS. SASS AND Norman received all 17,656 votes cast by the Wheeling Township delegation. In addition Mrs. Sass attracted seven of the 10 voters in Elk Grove Township, seven from Schaumburg Township and three from Palatine Township.

Stern and Williamson each received the entire Lake County vote, confirming reports that they had allied themselves in order to overcome what was expected to be a victory by Norman.

Williamson, however, received nearly unanimous support from Hanover and Elk Grove Townships, and attracted six of the 10 voters from Palatine Township, while Stern was able to claim only four votes outside of Lake County.

18-year-old arrested after squad car hit

A Hoffman Estates patrolman fired two warning shots and another gunshot late Monday night after a vehicle rammed his squad car during a brief car chase and escaped. An 18-year-old youth later was arrested on 11 charges.

Ronald Kotel, 106 Geronimo St., Hoffman Estates, was charged with four counts of disobeying a stop sign and one each of reckless conduct, fleeing or eluding a police officer, speeding, inadequate exhaust, leaving the scene of a personal injury accident, damage to village property and having no driver's license on his person.

The car chase began at about 10:55 p.m. near the intersection of Kingman Lane and Morton Street after a car was detected speeding, police said. The suspect vehicle collided with the squad car near the intersection of Flagstaff Lane and Washington Boulevard, about five blocks from where the pursuit began.

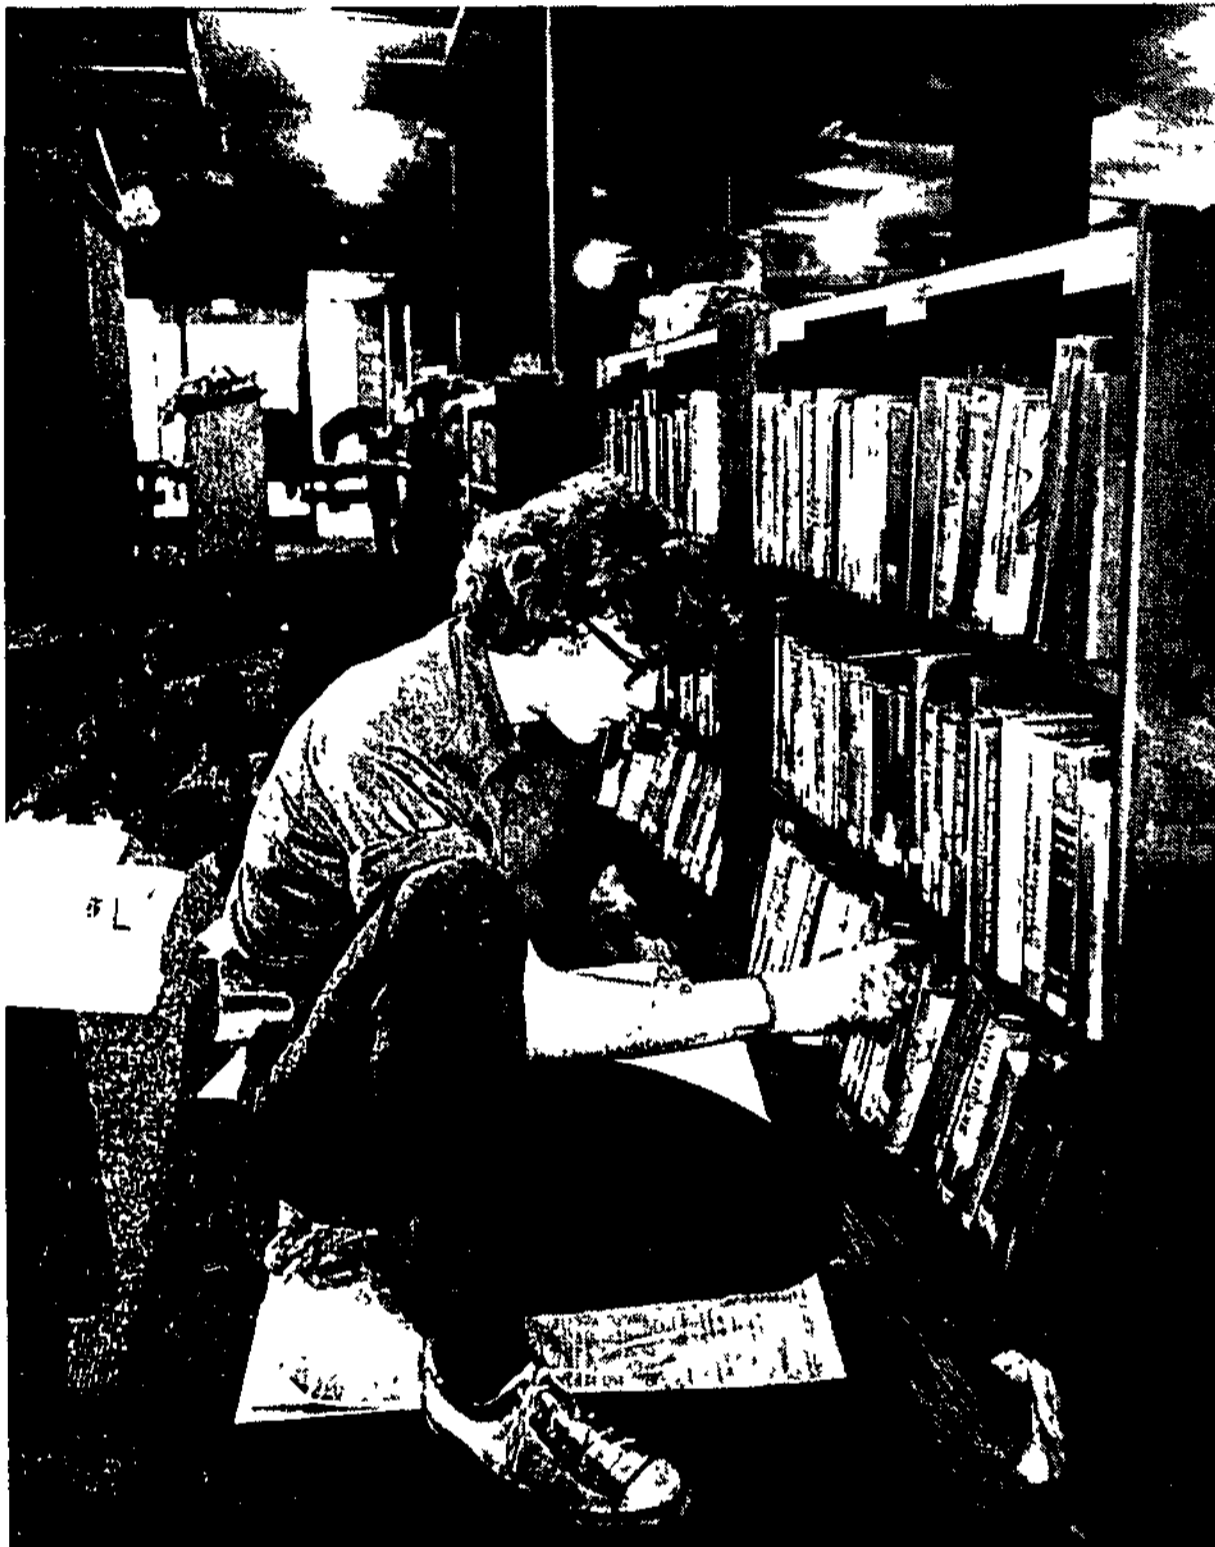

KOTEL WAS arrested at about 1 a.m. Tuesday after he went to the police station to report his auto stolen, authorities reported. The policeman, Richard Ricker, identified Kotel as the person involved in the chase after Ricker returned from Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, where he received treatment for a bump on the head. Police said.

Ricker clocked a car doing about 50 m.p.h. in a 20-m.p.h. zone on Kingman Lane. The suspect car failed to stop and continued west on Kingman Lane, and Ricker gave chase with his squad car emergency lights and siren going, authorities said.

The pursuit continued north on Washington Boulevard and then east on Flagstaff Lane. The suspect car then made a 180-degree turn in the road and headed at Ricker's squad car, police said. The two vehicles collided, but Ricker averted a head-on crash by turning his vehicle, authorities said.

After the impact, the suspect vehicle went on a parkway and nearby lawn and then continued south on Washington Boulevard, police reported.

RICKER FIRED TWO warning shots in the air and then one at the fleeing vehicle, police said. It was unknown where the third shot landed. The suspect car was found abandoned at the intersection of Washington Boulevard and Pleasant Street.

Suspected cat burglar sighted, scared away

A person suspected of being the cat burglar for whom Elk Grove Village police are searching was spotted and scared away early Tuesday morning.

Lawrence Needham, 350 Tonne Rd., told police he was awakened by a noise to find a man kneeling at the foot of his bed. Needham said he watched the burglar for a moment and then jumped out of bed.

The burglar, realizing he had been discovered, bolted from the room and out the front door of the apartment, taking Needham's wallet with him.

The only description of the burglar given by Needham, who called police at 4:45 a.m. to report the incident, was that he had dark hair. Needham said his wallet contained $160 in cash and some credit cards.

Police said they believed the burglar entered the third-floor apartment through an open patio door off a balcony. This is the second time the Eagles on Tonne apartment complex has been hit by burglars. Three other incidents were reported during the weekend.

Entry to the other apartments also were made through open patio doors. Kohnke told apartment dwellers to keep doors and windows locked and not be lulled into a false sense of security because the apartments are not on ground floors. He urged all residents to keep outside lights on, be alert and call the police at 439-3900 to report any suspicious actions.

Senior center slates Randhurst bus outing

Palatine township's Senior Citizens Center is sponsoring a free bus trip to Randhurst Shopping Center in Mount Prospect on Monday, July 15.

Senior citizens interested in going should call the center at 991-1112 to register their name and address. The bus will pick up residents at their homes that morning.

A similar shopping trip to Woodfield Shopping Center on Monday "proved successful, so that these shopping trips may be offered monthly if the response continues," said Louise Robertson, center coordinator.

The center is also sponsoring a dinner and auction trip to the Long Grove Village Tavern on Tuesday, June 25. The 40-person trip limit has already been met.

Some park activities canceled; no interest

Some of the Palatine Park District's summer programs have been canceled because of a lack of interest.

Basic scuba instruction, fencing, camping skills, mushroom workshop for children, let's cook lunch, organ, and adult watercolor and health food programs have been canceled for the summer.

Sections of other programs have been combined because of small registrations. Park district staff members are attempting to notify residents who registered for the discontinued classes of the cancellations this week and refund their registration fees, Elena Ruane, program director, said.

Programs that were scheduled to begin this week in the new Birchwood park recreational complex have been rescheduled at Community Park this week because of the center's incompletion.

Northwest Community to refinance past debts

Arlington to help hospital by selling municipal bonds

The Arlington Heights Village Board has agreed to lend its name to Northwest Community Hospital for the purpose of selling tax-exempt municipal revenue bonds.

Village trustees received assurance from two legal and financial experts Monday night that the plan to sell revenue bonds to refinance past hospital debts and buy new equipment would have absolutely no impact on Arlington

Heights' tax rate, bonding power or liability.

The bonds would be paid for exclusively by operating revenue from the hospital. But because they are municipal bonds and thereby tax-exempt, they carry a 2 to 2.5 per cent lower interest rate than conventional bonds.

THE DIFFERENCE will save the hospital nearly $250,000 a year on an $18 million loan.

Dave Williams, an attorney with Chapman and Cutler bond lawyers in Chicago, said the proposed bond sale represented no obligation to the Village of Arlington Heights and would not affect either the village's debt incurring powers or taxes.

Under the ordinance passed Monday night, the village would take over technical ownership of the hospital for the life of the bond issue, probably 20 years.

But the agreement specifically holds the village harmless in any lawsuits filed against the hospital, Williams said, and the hospital will be required to carry enough insurance to cover all claims against it.

The ordinance does not actually sell the revenue bonds, but puts the village in a legal position where they can be sold in the future, according to Arlington Heights Village Atty. Jack M. Siegel. Besides Northwest Community Hospital, it authorizes village bond sales for any other hospital or nursing home, he said.

MUNICIPAL BOND financing for the hospital is possible because of Arlington Heights' home-rule powers. The practice has been upheld by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Even if the hospital were for some reason unable to pay off the bonds, the debt would not be transferred to the village, Williams said.

"A default would not be a default against the Village of Arlington Heights and would have no effect on the village," he said.

A financial adviser to Northwest Community Hospital from Smith Barney and Co., a Chicago bond house, said issuing the revenue bonds would not impair any other bonds the village might want to sell.

"The market place looks at these as separate entities," he told the village board. Nor will it affect the village's financial rating which determines interest rates on bond sales, he said.

THE FERRIS WHEEL was assembled Tuesday as workmen prepare for the Rolling Meadows Jaycees Carnival scheduled to begin tomorrow and run through Sunday. The event will be held at the Topps-National parking lot at Kirchoff Road and Meadow Drive.

Philippe annex cost: $10,000?

Preliminary figures indicate that it will cost the City of Rolling Meadows about $10,000 in improvements and services to annex the Philippe subdivision.

The costs would include expenses for installing additional signs and fire hydrants in the area if they are needed.

At the same time the city will likely receive about $5,400 in additional yearly revenue with the annexation planned next week.

An impact study report presented to the public works committee Monday cited figures for additional street and traffic signs for the area totaling about $418, exclusive of labor, as well as on-going costs such as snow removal, sanitation and tree chipping.

THE LARGEST ongoing cost will be for sanitation service, which the city provides free to homeowners. Estimates of the city garbage service costs for the some 60 homes in the area will total about $4,700 annually plus about $1,596 for garbage bags, the report indicates.

Some $800 also will have to be spent initially for garbage bag stands and holders.

In addition, Fire Chief Thomas Fogarty has said that about a dozen more fire hydrants in the area may be needed. City Engr. James Muldowney Monday estimated that cost at some $750 each, or about $9,000 total.

SOME OF THE costs will be offset by the fact that the city's motor fuel tax and state income tax rebates will increase with annexation of the area. City Mgr. James Watson said the area, with an estimated assessed valuation of some $600,000, has about 300 residents.

The city receives about $10 in motor fuel tax funds and about $8 in state income tax funds for each person living in the city, Watson said. The total would mean about $5,400 more yearly in revenue in those two categories.

The Philippe area, bounded by Euclid Avenue, Kirchoff, Hicks and Rohlfing roads, is planned for annexation to the city June 25. City officials are hopeful the annexation can be completed in time to include the area in an upcoming special city census planned for September.

Parks hire maintenance firm for Sports Complex

The Rolling Meadows Park Board last night unanimously approved hiring Omega of Rolling Meadows to handle maintenance at the Sports Complex at an annual cost of $25,740.

This is the second time in the last three years that the park district has hired a janitorial service for the complex. The first attempt proved unsuccessful because the company had only two employees and couldn't keep up with the work when one of them was ill or on vacation, according to Comr. Jeannine Plackek.

Omega has 65 employees and six superintendents, she said. "They will have a supervisor available to us at anytime," Mrs. Plackek added.

Omega, the third lowest bid, was chosen because of number of employees and location, according to last night's discussion.

The lowest bidder had only two employees and the second lowest bidder was located in Chicago.

The action, under consideration for several months, was taken after a surprise visit from Rolling Meadows and state health inspectors. The inspectors found sanitary conditions to be generally good at the sports complex, according to a report released recently.

CITY HEALTH Inspector Donald Schindler made some suggestions for changes at the last building and grounds committee meeting at the request of the board, Mrs. Plackek said. These suggestions are presently being put into practice.

Mrs. Plackek said she hoped the maintenance service will free a park district superintendent from supervising the clean-up staff, allow problems to be handled more quickly through a telephone call or brief meeting, and make the sports complex a "more agreeable place for people to congregate." She said she hopes more adults would be encouraged to use the facility.

"It's for the people of the park district," Mrs. Plackek said.

Suggestions made by Schindler that are incorporated by the park district include dividing the ice arena from the rest of the complex, getting rid of the concession stand area and turning it into a game room, and replacing the rubber mats in both the washrooms and the concession stand area.

Nike base apparently will stay with Army

by JOE SWICKARD

The Arlington Heights Park District apparently has lost the battle for control of the Arlington Heights Nike Base at Central and Wilke roads.

Barry Goode, an aide to U.S. Sen. Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill., said Tuesday, "I had a long talk with (Eugene) Berg (undersecretary of the Army) and Gen. (K.B.) Cooper and it looks like the decision is pretty far along and it is unfavorable."

The park district and the Army have been struggling for the remaining 75 acres of the base. The district wants to build a golf course on the land and the Army wants to use it as a weekend training center for about 1,000 Army Reservists.

BERG MET LAST month with representatives of area legislators and members of the Committee for Utilization of the Nike Base, an umbrella group favoring the park's position, to discuss the problem. Berg agreed at the meeting to review the situation and make a recommendation to Sec. of the Army Howard Callaway.

Berg also agreed to meet with the legislators prior to his forwarding the final recommendation. According to Goode, Berg "broke his promise," and "... the recommendation has gone to Callaway's desk this morning (Tuesday)."

Goode said a letter from Stevenson, and cosigned by Sen. Charles Percy and U.S. Rep. Philip M. Crane, R-12th, will be sent to Callaway asking that the base be turned over to civilian control.

A MEETING between the legislators and Berg is scheduled to take place "in a day or two," Goode said. He said he hoped the letter plus the meeting would cause Berg to reconsider his recommendation.

At least one couple overcome by fumes

by JERRY THOMAS

During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 58, and his wife, Verna, 53, of 20 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a serviceman Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors checked furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Rettenbacher, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Rettenbacher said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records that showed over 100 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Rettenbacher.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zetek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zetek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 8,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOMES WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Keswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

George Fiedler of Johnson Corp. said that in most cases, furnace parts have not been defective. He blamed the leaks on poor ventilation due to improper installation of the furnaces.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

"We are working on it in earnest and have the Centex builders and Johnson Furnace Co.'s full cooperation," said Zetek. "When the homes in question were built, they were inspected by the FHA and so legally, I suppose, they are not our responsibility. But we have put ourselves in the position of attempting to help and resolve the problem," Zetek said.

THOMPSON SAID he had no idea until now that there was a widespread problem of defective furnaces in the community.

"Today, I can talk about it with some knowledge but that night I had no inkling and if not for the fact that my wife was restless and could not sleep, we might both be dead," said Thompson.

"That night I felt fine but tired and went to bed early and my wife, who had complained of feeling bad, stayed up sitting in bed," he said.

"She woke me and complained of feeling extremely ill. I got up, found my way to the bathroom for some water and on the way back began feeling sick myself," said Thompson.

"Now I know why. The fumes were high in the room and when I was in bed lying down, I was not breathing as much of them as Verna."

When his wife said she was unable to swallow the water, Johnson recalled, he knew something was seriously wrong and made an emergency call to the village fire department.

"I remember opening the door to the firemen and the minute one fireman walked in he said, 'I think I know what the problem is' and he walked straight to the furnace room," said Thompson.

"He told us later he had just bought a home in the village and found his heat exchanger was corroded exactly like ours was."

"I couldn't believe it and still don't understand how the previous inspection didn't show that or how the people who lived in the house before us could have lived there without incident," said Thompson.

THE COUPLE, who is childless, do not believe they have suffered any permanent damage from the fumes. Thompson said Johnson Furnace Co. provided a replacement heat exchanger at no charge and he only had to pay for the installation. Johnson has since ended its free replacement policy, blaming the problem on bad installations.

"I'm talking about it now because it could help someone else," said Thompson. "I had no idea the problem was so widespread."

Public works wrapup

Code revision asked for pools

A recreational builder has recommended that Rolling Meadows officials consider revising city building codes which prohibit certain types of underground swimming pools.

William Palluck of Palluck Enterprises in Rolling Meadows Monday told the city council public works-building and zoning committee that vinyl liner underground pools which are not allowed in the city would be structurally more sound than some above ground types. He said the vinyl-liner pools are less expensive than cement underground types and would provide persons who cannot afford the expensive cement pools with an alternative good underground type.

The pools have not been allowed because of problems with them some years ago when they were first marketed, Ald. Thomas Waldron (2nd) said. However, Building Inspector Donald McDade told the committee neighboring communities now allow the vinyl-liner pools and have reported no problems with them.

McDade was instructed by the committee to prepare a report on the matter for further study.

Urge fees be waived

The committee Monday recommended waiving fees for building permits for the Community Church of Rolling Meadows. The church is planning to install a new roof. The city normally waives permit fees for not-for-profit enterprises.

A resolution recommending the action will be sent to the city council.

No-parking signs weighed Signs prohibiting parking on cul-de-sacs in the Creekside subdivision on garbage pickup days may be posted. City officials agreed to direct city Atty. Donald Rose to investigate the legality of the move in an attempt to stop parking of cars which block city garbage trucks.

Asst. Supt. of Public Works Dick Martin told the committee trucks cannot negotiate the narrow cul-de-sacs for refuse pickup when cars are parked there. The cul-de-sacs are private drives, but the committee recommended a meeting with the subdivision's homeowners' association to consider a cooperative action to resolve the problem.

A representative of the homeowners' association will be asked to attend the next meeting.

Summer tree spraying?

A mid-July spraying of maple trees in the city may be performed in addition to the spring spraying which has already been completed.

Asst. Supt. of Public Works Dick Martin recommended the additional spraying to kill disease-causing substances on the trees.

The July spraying would be in addition to the spring spraying and another fall spraying planned. Cost would be about $1,300 to $1,500, Martin estimated.

Fine for trash dumping?

Persons who dump trash and debris behind or near the public works building may be subject to a fine soon. The committee, at the urging of public works officials recommended that "no dumping" signs be posted around the building at 3200 Central Rd. to deter trash dumping.

The dumping has occurred apparently as residents drop off brush to be disposed of by the department. Public works officials have said the situation has become a problem.

Status report in works

A report outlining the current status, goals and needs of the city's recycling, ecology and beautification (REB) committee will be prepared for the public works committee.

REB committee chairman Evelyn Drummond was asked to prepare the report after a discussion of the future status of the REB committee and of recycling if the city decides to build an incinerator plant for refuse removal.

Revenues which can be generated by recycling as well as equipment and manpower needs of the committee should be cited in the report, Ald. Daniel Weber (4th) said.

Mrs. Drummond also said the committee may request to increase the number of days on which recycling drives are held. Currently two drives per month are held.

Would serve 4 townships

Alcoholism center funding requested

by DIANE STEFANOS

Federal revenue-sharing funds from four local townships will be requested to establish an area alcoholism outpatient center.

Roger Boekenbauer, a counselor for Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois, has been studying the disease in Elk Grove, Palatine, Schaumburg and Wheeling townships for six months. He said he has found "many people in the suburbs with alcohol-related problems that need counseling and treatment."

Boekenbauer's proposed center would be operated by the Lutheran Welfare Services of Illinois which has offered a similar alcoholism drug dependence program at three Chicago centers during the past six years.

The organization is a nonprofit social services group that offers day care and care for the elderly and mentally retarded throughout the country. Although the organization is affiliated with the Lutheran churches of America, the alcoholism program is not.

BOEKENBAUER PLANS to request $15,000 in revenue sharing funds from each of the four townships for the funding of the program and center. The Elk Grove Township board is expected to consider the request for funds at its June 27 meeting. Other townships' mental health committees are still in the process of reviewing the program proposal.

Larry Walker, director of youth services for Schaumburg township said that he feels that there is a "definite" need for such an alcohol center in the Schaumburg area.

"In working with young people, I see the need for a service that just isn't available in our township," he said.

Walker considers the qualifications of Boekenbauer and other Lutheran Welfare Service staff members working with alcoholism to be "more than adequate."

BOEKENBAUER HOPES that township funds can be made available this summer so that the center can open in September. Boekenbauer has been conducting a preliminary alcoholic program in the four-township area since January to prove to township board members that there is a need for such services.

Patient fees, contributions and township funds would serve as the financial base for the proposed central out-patient clinic. Those funds would be used to pay for staff salaries, rental space, utilities and printed materials, he said.

The proposed central clinic would have four staff members to serve all four townships. Boekenbauer said a location for the clinic will be selected and services will begin as soon as township funds are available.

way to reject the recommendation because the base is one of the last remaining open tracts of land in the area and it could be put to better use than a weekend reservist center.

Callaway should base his decision, the letter said, on "... what the public interest requires and not just the reservists interests."

According to Goode, the Army would have to spend $2.4 million to rehabilitate the facility to house the training center. The letter suggests the money could be spent for upgrading O'Hare, Glenview Naval Air Station or Ft. Sheridan for the Reservists.

"It's my understanding," Goode said, "that work would have to be from the ground up. It'd be breaking ground and going up."

He tempered any enthusiasm that might be generated by the letter and the meeting. "I just can't be optimistic," he said.

Citizens' group plans to widen Nike base picketing

The Army's apparent decision to hold on to the Arlington Heights Nike Base could bring about large-scale picketing and demonstrations throughout the Chicago area.

"We'll give them time to see what they are going to do. We said we weren't going to picket for a while, but we could picket not only the base here but recruiting stations, Glenview (Naval Air Station) and Fort Sheridan," said a spokesman for the Citizens' Committee for the Utilization of the Nike Base.

The committee picketed the base for two consecutive weekends, but pulled off the lines June 9 pending Army undersecretary Eugene Berg's announcement.

THE SPOKESMAN said the "time for diplomacy" may have passed. He said more dramatic gestures may be necessary.

"They say they need the base for the Reserves. Well, they won't need the base if they can't recruit any reserves, can they," he said.

"We'll be asking the men to join the Navy or Marine reserves at Glenview or the Army at Sheridan. We won't be un-American. We just want people to know what the Army's doing," he said.

ANOTHER MEMBER of the committee has adopted a wait-and-see attitude pending the outcome of the meeting this week and legislators' letter to Sec. Callaway. He said the letter "seems fair enough."

He drew some hope, he said, from the support given by U.S. Rep. Philip M. Crane, R-11th, and U.S. Sen. Charles Percy, R-11th, in signing the letter.

"You can't ask for more than that. It shows we have political support from all viewpoints," he said.

Thomas Thornton, park district director, appeared ready for a defeat, but apparently is willing to follow it up with new tactics and objectives.

"When I read the story yesterday, I wasn't very optimistic," Thornton said.

He said he hoped the meeting and letter would produce a favorable decision by Callaway. "Once they (the Army) make a decision, it'll be a long time before they reverse it," he said.

Specific costs still being discussed

Decision to purchase new school books expected today

A final decision on the purchase of new books for the math, language arts and health programs is expected at tonight's Palatine-Rolling Meadows Dist. 15 Board of Education meeting.

No cost estimates on the prices were available Tuesday. Joann Newman, division director for curriculum implementation, said the district is still negotiating with the publishers on specific costs.

The new elementary books for first through sixth grades, technically approved during a budget discussion earlier this year, will concentrate on problem solving and drop much of the difficult "modern math" terminology, according to school district officials.

Final approval is also expected on supplementary math books for the elementary grades. These will be purchased in limited quantities and used in addition to the regular text in all Dist. 15 elementary schools next year.

SOME JUNIOR HIGH school students may also have new math books next fall. Approval is being sought to pilot the same textbook series being purchased for the elementary grades. Under a pilot program, the new textbooks are introduced in a few of the Dist. 15 classes. If the program is successful, it will be expanded to include all schools.

Two supplementary math series are also expected to be piloted in the junior highs.

All nine of the new language arts series being suggested for elementary and junior high schools next year show more emphasis on the basics of grammar instead of creativity, according to school officials.

FIVE SERIES ARE expected to be tried out in 12 of the 16 elementary schools next fall. Also being considered is a drama program for the elementary students. A drama program has already been instituted in the junior high schools.

The junior high school language arts recommendations are for four different series. If all four sets are adopted after a pilot study is completed next spring, each set will be split between four teachers.

The new health books are being purchased for grades one through eight. They include recent health information and sections on bike and bus safety, according to school officials.

The books even show the new way of brushing teeth, which is simply the older way reinstated, according to Myrae Rundle, division director for curriculum planning and development. The "new way" of brushing your teeth is from side to side, instead of up and down.

Dems name woman, labor rep as conference delegates

Democrats from the 12th Congressional District, in a surprising vote, elected two Elk Grove Village residents to represent them at the National Democratic Conference in Kansas City next December.

Elected were the "running mates" of two Democratic party leaders who had been considered the most likely choices. The delegates will be Walter Williamson, a labor representative, and Julie Sass, who had the backing of most of the female "delegate electors" who participated in the balloting.

Williamson benefited from a large block of votes which he apparently attracted through an alliance with Herbert (Hub) Stern, chairman of the Lake County Democratic delegation, which had the largest bloc of votes under the weighted voting system used in the balloting.

Donald Norman

Herbert Stern

With 22,983 votes from Lake County, Williamson finished first among 24 candidates with 45,628 votes. Mrs. Sass, who had the benefit of all the votes also pledged to Donald L. Norman, Wheeling

Township Committeeman and the other favorite in the race along with Stern, collected 35,172 votes to narrowly edge Norman for the second delegate position. Norman collected 34,662 votes. Stern, who attracted less than 5,000 votes from the Cook County portion of the congressional district, ran a poor fourth 26,913 votes.

IN A MOVE apparently engineered by

Stern, the voting was conducted by secret ballot. On a motion by Robert E. R. Fritz of Palatine the delegate electors first voted 29 to 25 to conduct the secret ballot, a move which was opposed by Norman and his Wheeling Township supporters.

State central Committeeman representative Daniel Pierce then called for a roll call vote on the secret ballot question, with each delegate casting his weighted vote. The secret ballot was decided upon with a total of slightly more than 45,000 weighted votes, very close to the number which Williamson received in the delegate election.

Midway in the balloting, Schaumburg Township Committeeman John Morrissey announced he was withdrawing his name as a candidate for delegate. Morrissey said that all 10 electors from his township had agreed to ease their vote for Norman, although they could not agree on the second candidate.

MRS. SASS AND Norman received all 17,856 votes cast by the Wheeling Township delegation. In addition Mrs. Sass attracted seven of the 10 voters in Elk Grove Township, seven from Schaumburg Township and three from Palatine Township.

Stern and Williamson each received the entire Lake County vote, confirming reports that they had allied themselves in order to overcome what was expected to be a victory by Norman.

Williamson, however, received nearly unanimous support from Hanover and Elk Grove Townships, and attracted six of the 10 voters from Palatine Township, while Stern was able to claim only four votes outside of Lake County.

18-year-old arrested after squad car hit

A Hoffman Estates patrolman fired two warning shots and another gunshot late Monday night after a vehicle rammed his squad car during a brief car chase and escaped. An 18-year-old youth later was arrested on 11 charges.

Ronald Kotel, 106 Geronimo St., Hoffman Estates, was charged with four counts of disobeying a stop sign and one each of reckless conduct, fleeing or eluding a police officer, speeding, inadequate exhaust, leaving the scene of a personal injury accident, damage to village property and having no driver's license on his person.

The car chase began at about 10:55 p.m. near the intersection of Kingman Lane and Morton Street after a car was detected speeding, police said. The suspect vehicle collided with the squad car near the intersection of Flagstaff Lane and Washington Boulevard, about five blocks from where the pursuit began.

KOTEL WAS arrested at about 1 a.m. Tuesday after he went to the police station to report his auto stolen, authorities reported. The policeman, Richard Ricker, identified Kotel as the person involved in the chase after Ricker returned from Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, where he received treatment for a bump on the head, Police said.

Ricker clocked a car doing about 50 m.p.h. in a 20-m.p.h. zone on Kingman Lane. The suspect car failed to stop and continued west on Kingman Lane, and Ricker gave chase with his squad car emergency lights and siren going, authorities said.

The pursuit continued north on Washington Boulevard and then east on Flagstaff Lane. The suspect car then made a 180-degree turn in the road and headed at Ricker's squad car, police said. The two vehicles collided, but Ricker averted a head-on crash by turning his vehicle, authorities said.

After the impact, the suspect vehicle went on a parkway and nearby lawn and then continued south on Washington Boulevard, police reported.

RICKER FIRED TWO warning shots in the air and then one at the fleeing vehicle, police said. It was unknown where the third shot landed. The suspect car was found abandoned at the intersection of Washington Boulevard and Pleasant Street.

Annex proposed Ramada Inn site to village

The proposed site of a Ramada Inn at Northwest Highway and Quantin Road has been annexed to the Village of Palatine removing the final obstacle to construction of the hotel.

The Palatine Village Board on Monday unanimously approved the annexation of the 5.75-acre site where Uncle Andy's Cow Palace is now located and three other parcels along Quantin Road.

A preannexation agreement between the village and John Bakos, owner of the property, permits construction of the Ramada Inn in accordance with village building codes.

Residents of Lake Park Estates, who successfully blocked construction of the hotel in unincorporated Palatine Township, have indicated they may file a lawsuit in an attempt to block the construction.

THE RESIDENTS argued Monday that the village should conduct a new series of public hearings on the Ramada Inn project prior to issuing building permits. They contend that the property is annexed to the village as single-family residential, and public hearings must be held on other uses despite previous agreements.

Construction plans call for a four-story motel with 166 rooms and a one-story commercial building housing managerial offices, banquet facilities and a restaurant. A second phase of the development calls for tearing down Uncle Andy's Cow Palace and constructing a one-story office building with underground parking.

Lake Park Estate homeowners immediately north and northeast of the Ramada Inn site have argued construction of the hotel will result in depreciation of their property values.

Architectural plans call for low-intensity lighting, landscaping with buffer zones for abutting residential homeowners and provisions for water retention.

Bakos has indicated he hopes to have construction under way by August, with completion in one year.

Policeman fires three shots

Teen arrested after chase, collision with squad car

A Hoffman Estates patrolman fired two warning shots and another gunshot late Monday night after a vehicle rammed his squad car during a brief car chase and escaped. An 18-year-old youth later was arrested on 11 charges.

Ronald Kotel, 106 Geronimo St., Hoffman Estates, was charged with four counts of disobeying a stop sign and one each of reckless conduct, fleeing or eluding a police officer, speeding, inadequate exhaust, leaving the scene of a personal injury accident, damage to village property and having no driver's license on his person.

The car chase began at about 10:55 p.m. near the intersection of Kingman Lane and Morton Street after a car was detected speeding, police said. The suspect vehicle collided with the squad car near the intersection of Flagstaff Lane and Washington Boulevard, about five blocks from where the pursuit began.

KOTEL WAS arrested at about 1 a.m. Tuesday after he went to the police station to report his auto stolen, authorities reported. The policeman, Richard Ricker, identified Kotel as the person involved in the chase after Ricker returned from Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, where he received treatment for a bump on the head, Police said.

Ricker clocked a car doing about 50 m.p.h. in a 20-m.p.h. zone on Kingman Lane. The suspect car failed to stop and continued west on Kingman Lane, and Ricker gave chase with his squad car emergency lights and siren going, authorities said.

The pursuit continued north on Washington Boulevard and then east on Flagstaff Lane. The suspect car then made a 180-degree turn in the road and headed at Ricker's squad car, police said. The two vehicles collided, but Ricker averted a head-on crash by turning his vehicle, authorities said.

After the impact, the suspect vehicle went on a parkway and nearby lawn and then continued south on Washington Boulevard, police reported.

RICKER FIRED TWO warning shots in the air and then one at the fleeing vehicle, police said. It was unknown where the third shot landed. The suspect car was found abandoned at the intersection of Washington Boulevard and Pleasant Street.

Damage to both cars was estimated at more than $100 each. The right front fender and radiator on the squad car were damaged.

Kotel was released after posting $1,000 bond. He is scheduled to appear Aug. 2 in the Hoffman Estates branch of the Cook County Circuit Court.

$242,194 would also cover deficit

Fire unit seeks village funds for 10 new firemen

The Hoffman Estates Fire Protection District asked the village of Hoffman Estates for $242,194 to cover deficits in last year's budget, provide pay increases this year and allow the hiring of 10 additional firemen.

The request was presented to the village board finance committee Tuesday night as it met with the district board to begin planning financial affairs for the time when the village assumes fire protection responsibilities.

Of the total request, $53,894 would cover deficits in the district's budget for last year. These stem from manpower cost increases. About $20,000 provided pay raises for the firemen last year. The rest financed the hiring of 2½ additional men. The village agreed to pay the $20,000 and reserve the decision on the rest.

The second request was for $38,300 to give each fire district employee a 10 percent raise for 1974-75. The raises, if granted, will be retroactive to May 1.

The 10 additional firemen would cost an estimated $150,000, at a salary of $11,000 each and fringe benefits of about $4,000 each. The men would man the third fire station in the district.

The two governmental units did not discuss the cost of manning the fourth fire station which the village is going to build north of the Northwest Tollway. Village officials indicated they may be more concerned with staffing that building than the third fire station because they have committed themselves to providing fire service to the Winston Knolls area.

Manpower expectations for the fourth station are for six full-time men plus volunteers. Fire Chief Carl Selke is to advise the village on whether that staffing level should be sufficient. Village officials said he may be asked whether that is adequate manpower when the village and fire district go to court Thursday seeking approval for transfer of that portion of the village from Palatine rural fire protection district to the Hoffman Estates District. This step is preliminary to village establishment of a municipal fire department.

$2,500 in furnishings taken from apartment

Shag carpeting, tile, a gas range and a sump pump, valued at a total $2,500, were reported stolen Monday from the Schaumburg Green apartments, 1220 Cambria Dr., Schaumburg.

The report was made by officials of the M-Z Construction Corp. to Schaumburg police who are investigating the theft.

Village learns condo project builder identity

Hoffman Estates officials Monday night learned the identity of a developer planning to construct four 12-story condominium buildings at the southeast corner of Golf and Barrington roads.

The approximately 80-acre site is being sold by Jack Pritzker, Chicago financier, to L & S Construction Corp. of Chicago, said Perry Snyderman, attorney for L & S.

Monday's informal session with Snyderman, Joseph Scianna, L & S president, and consultants for the proposed developer was the second session scheduled for preliminary discussion of a height variation that would be required for the buildings.

The first meeting was May 20, and although spokesmen for the developer failed to attend, trustees discussed plans submitted by Kenroy Corp., broker in the land sale. Until this week, the village knew only that a potential purchaser was considering the project.

SCIANNA HAS CONSTRUCTED similar projects in the area, including Oak Brook Towers, but always for ownership by another person or firm, said Snyderman. The Hoffman Estates project would be the first in which Scianna developed land for his own sale and benefit, he said. Scianna has chosen to expand from construction into total development because of the greater profit potential, said Snyderman.

If the height variation, from an ordinance permitting 45-foot-high buildings, is granted, construction could begin next March. The first building would be complete in 15 to 18 months, he said, and the three remaining buildings would not be started until after the first one proves successful, he added.

Village trustees agreed to consider the proposal for one week, and to indicate their initial reaction to Snyderman at next Monday's village board meeting. If the trustees' reaction is favorable, Scianna will be advised to present his variance request in greater detail to the zoning board of appeals for review and recommendation to the village board.

THE CELESTRON TELESCOPE is focused at the new observatory at Eisenhower Junior High School by student assistant Joe Mayenschein, a Schaumburg High School student, helps answer questions and operate the astronomy facility. The observatory is open to the public Friday nights.

Eisenhower observatory open

Take a peek at the stars...

Parents and youngsters in Schaumburg Township Dist. 54 have an opportunity to see the stars.

Every Friday night from 9 to 10 the new observatory at Eisenhower Junior High School, 800 W. Hassell Rd., Hoffman Estates, is open to the public. Admission is free, but advance tickets are necessary for admission.

The center of attraction is the 14-inch celestron telescope mounted on a nine-foot cement block pillar. It can locate distant stars, nebula and other galaxies. To get tickets contact Larry Small, science consultant, at 894-7420.

THE NEW ADDITION to the district complements the astronomy curriculum taught in the third and eighth grades. Astronomy also is being piloted for the sixth-grade science curriculum.

The district had a portable telescope that was transported between the schools before the observatory was set up. The problem with the portable scope, said Small, was properly focusing it on the North Star. Often, youngsters, excited about looking through a telescope, could never get it focused on any object in the sky, he said. It also did not have the magnifying power the celestron scope offers.

The telescope can magnify 1,500 times through the 14-inch reflector mirror. It also follows the North Star so teachers can be sure students are seeing the proper objects, he said.

IN THE FUTURE, advanced eighth-grade students will be able to photograph the skies with the telescope, he said.

The centralized observatory also allows the district to purchase better and more models for the astronomy units, he said.

Small anticipates more than 2,000 students and parents will use the observatory within the next year. With a central location, he said, everyone in the community can benefit from the equipment.

Independence Day panel names events chairmen

Chairmen of various events being planned by the Hoffman Estates Independence Day committee were announced recently by William Palmer.

Harry Connell, 111 E. Dixon, was named co-grounds chairman, and Christopher Hodge, Wheeling, was appointed entertainment chairman. Connell is district sales manager for Graham Magnetics, Des Plaines, and Hodge is a loan officer with Suburban Bank of Hoffman Estates.

Mrs. James Koertgen and Mrs. Bruce Lind will serve as cochairmen of the food committee, and Mrs. James Kill will be ticket chairman.

"Ethnic America, 1974" is the theme for this year's July 4 parade, scheduled for 10 a.m. at Illinois Boulevard and Payson street.

Participants in the parade include the Shannon Rovers Irish Pipe Band and the Silver Knights Drum and Twirling Corps. The Silver Knights will also join in evening activities at Conant High School from 8:30 to 9 p.m. Fireworks will begin at 9:30 p.m.

Schwinn Bicycle, 1228 N. Roselle Rd., Schaumburg will provide trophies for a "bike and trike" section of the parade, said Ralph Allen, parade marshal.

Trophies will be awarded to boys and girls in each division (bike and trike). Applications are not necessary, but children are asked to be at the parade site by 9:30 a.m.

Youngsters are being encouraged to decorate bicycles according to their own choice and all will receive participation ribbons, Allen said.

Any individual or organization is welcome to march in the parade, Allen emphasized. He said float and marching applications can be obtained by contacting him at 885-4833.

926-unit project before zoning board

Zoning for a 926-unit development to include 11-story condominium buildings on Roselle Road will be discussed at tonight's meeting of Schaumburg Zoning Board of Appeals.

G-S Building Corp., Arlington Heights, is planning an 80-acre development that would contain 286 townhomes, three 7-story and two 11-story condominium buildings.

The land is on the east side of Roselle Road just south of the Lancer Park subdivision and is now owned by the George Longosz family.

The builder is investigating the possibility of converting a vacant 80-foot Northern Illinois Gas Co. pipeline touching the property on the north to walkways, bicycle paths and other recreational facilities, according to representatives of Babin and Associates, land planners.

The zoning hearing, open to the public, will be held at 8 p.m. in the Civic Center, Lincoln Hall, 101 S. Schaumburg Ct.

the school. In addition, student Bill Jacoby designed a shelter for the camp which will be built by a volunteer men's group. Randy Siemon designed the tables. The tables and shelter at the camp were destroyed by vandals.

At least one couple overcome by fumes

Elk Grove officials knew of bad furnaces for 2 years

by JERRY THOMAS

During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 58, and his wife, Verne, 59, of 20 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a service-man Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors checked furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Reitenbach, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Reitenbach said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records that showed over 100 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Reitenbach.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zettek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zettek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 6,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOMES WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Keswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

Park swim passes bear incorrect phone number

The wrong telephone number for Atcher Pool has been printed on the season swim passes for the Schaumburg Park District.

Paul Derda, park district director, said the Atcher Pool number should be 894-9550 instead of the printed 529-8950.

The mistake was made by the printer when he copied an old season pass, and the park district staff failed to detect the error, Derda said.

Fire truck's window shattered by rock

The side cab window of a Schaumburg Fire Department hook-and-ladder truck was shattered by a rock Monday as the vehicle returned from an unattended fire at 1510 Valley Ln., Schaumburg. Damage was set at $50.

Officials said the truck was driving down Valley Lane at about 10:15 p.m. returning from a call that turned out to be smoking lint coming from a clothes dryer.

"It's impossible to recall every pass," Derda said. "We'll put a sticker over it to correct the mistake when people come to the pool."

He noted he had received complaints from a citizen at the published number that many residents had called over the weekend to inquire about the opening of the district's two pools.

Interested citizens can purchase pool passes at the Meinecke Community Center, 220 E. Weatherfield Way. Passes cost $35 per family, $21 for an adult and $15 for a child.

Village board wrapup

Officials ease stand on unpaved drives

The owners of 101 stone or dirt driveways in the Parcel A subdivision of Hoffman Estates have gotten a reprieve from a village demand they immediately pave their drives.

Village Mgr. George Longmeyer said Monday night the village will delay enforcement of an ultimatum it gave the driveway owners until the board determines whether it will try to enforce an ordinance retroactively. The village in early May mailed each owner a notice the driveways did not conform to an ordinance enacted in 1972 and gave the owners 60 days to pave the drives with asphalt or concrete or face daily fines of $25 to $500. Many or all of the driveways had been installed before the 1972 ordinance passage. The subdivision is located east of Roselle Road between Golf and Higgins roads.

At last week's board meeting, Barry Clark of Hanover Park, representing his mother-in-law, asked the village board if it actually intended to enforce the paving law retroactively, and questioned the legality of such a plan. The board asked him for a week to consider the matter.

Monday the board referred the retroactive question to its judicial committee, and told Clark the homeowners may wait until the board receives and acts on a committee recommendation. Clark and the trustees also noted the current strike by drivers of cement trucks, and inability to obtain paving materials during the strike. The strike was called May 15, just a few days after the village letters were mailed.

Firehouse money available

Money is available in Hoffman Estates to construct a temporary fire house north of the Northwest Tollway and staff it with six fulltime men, plus volunteers, if Cook County Circuit Court Judge Harry Comerford so orders Thursday morning.

The village hopes it has covered all options Comerford might be expected to consider in hearing its request for a referendum in the Winston Knolls — Westbury area for disannexation from Palatine Rural Fire Protection District and annexation to the Hoffman Estates Fire District. One consideration is a guarantee to residents they will receive equal or better fire service than they now have under Palatine.

Comerford might request an immediate physical presence by Hoffman Estates Fire Protection District, although village officials hope he will not. The village would like to see coverage by the Hoffman Estates district from its present facilities south of the tollroad, supplemented by a contract with Palatine Rural, for the few months period until a permanent fire hall is constructed in Westbury.

The village is proceeding with plans for the permanent firehouse, and could approve architecture and design within a month. It also is proceeding with plans to establish a municipal fire department to operate from the northern station as well as assuming all debts, responsibilities and revenues for fire district territory south of the tollroad.

In a resolution approved Monday, the village board provided $50,000 for a temporary fire house, trailer with sleeping facilities and six fire fighters, in case Judge Comerford orders such facilities.

Hennessy misses meeting

Edward Hennessy, newly appointed trustee in Hoffman Estates, missed his first village board meeting because he failed to resign a public position he holds in Schaumburg Township.

Hennessy was not seated on the village board Monday to avoid a potential double-dipping situation. Hennessy still holds the township office of tax collector, which he was to have resigned with his village trustee appointment. He apparently forgot to do so. Hennessy was appointed last week to a one-year vacancy in the term of resigned trustee Diane Jensen.

Timmons transit liaison

Hoffman Estates Trustee Melvin Timmons was appointed this week as the village's liaison representative to the Schaumburg Village mass transportation committee.

Schaumburg and Hoffman Estates are planning a joint contract with a consulting firm yet to be chosen to study mass transit needs in the two villages, and propose a means of filling those needs. Subsidized bus service, perhaps with Regional Transportation Authority funding, is one area expected to be considered.

The villages tentatively have agreed to fund the study on a pro-rated basis, using ratios of assessed property value as the means of splitting costs. Schaumburg requested the Hoffman Estates liaison appointment to permit Hoffman Estates a voice in consultant firm selection.

Relief from mosquitos

Hoffman Estates may be relatively mosquito free this year. The village board this week approved a $1,168 contract with Clark Outdoor Spraying for service to supplement efforts of the Mosquito Abatement District. Service will be essentially the same as Clark provided last year, when residents reported the mosquito pest level was greatly reduced from the previous year.

No added services in '74-'75 budget

Hoffman Estates residents are unlikely to find any new service benefits in the 1974-75 budget approved Monday by the village board.

"Most of our budget is based on an increased work load and trying to keep up with things," said Village Mgr. George Longmeyer after trustees voted approval of the $4.9 million expenditure plan for the fiscal year that started May 1.

There will be road improvements as a result of the budget, but the projects provided for have been planned for some time. These include reconstruction or repaving of Bode, Jones and Hillcrest roads, along with normal patching and street maintenance.

THE VILLAGE ALSO hopes to use portions of the budget for sidewalk repairs. The budget includes $36,000 for that purpose, but Longmeyer said officials are preparing a major reconstruction program, and the proposal and financing sources will be presented later in the year.

Among personnel expansions provided in the budget is an administrative assistant to be named soon to Longmeyer's staff. While the budget provides $10,000 for the aide's salary, Longmeyer said a full year's salary of $11,000 has been agreed to.

Also to be added is an engineer, to fill the vacancy left by promotion of Joe Atkinson from engineer to assistant director of public works. Two patrolmen are being added to the police department staff. The department will have total manpower by the end of the year of one chief, two lieutenants, six sergeants, five detective juvenile officers, 26 patrolmen and a variety of radio operators, cross-guard guards and secretarial staff members.

An electrical inspector has been added to the staff of the building department giving the village a total of two building inspectors, one fulltime electrical inspector and one parttime plumbing inspector.

FEDERAL REVENUE-sharing funds basically are being split between police and streets departments, with smaller shares going for equipment purchase and finance department uses.

In police, $114,000 in revenue sharing will supplement salaries and the purchase of 11 squad cars. In streets work, $113,500 will go for repairs, with another $17,000 devoted to sidewalk repairs.

Village officials described this year's budget as the tightest it had ever approved, and noted cuts were made in many areas of department head requests.

As the board has done in the past,

Mayor Virginia Hayter pledged this will be the last year that a budget is adopted after the start of the fiscal year. Trustees had hoped for earlier adoption this year, but final preparation was delayed when negotiations with police employees extended longer than anticipated.

Sump pump checks show illegal hookups

by MARCIA KRAMER

House-to-house inspections in the Colonial Heights subdivision of Mount Prospect have turned up an abundance of illegally connected sump pumps, according to Public Works Director David L. Creamer.

The subdivision, on the west edge of the village, is the first to be inspected for improper connections to the sanitary sewer system. Eventually, said Creamer, inspectors from the department and the Metropolitan Sanitary District "hope to get into every home" in the village to determine the extent of — and to encourage the removal of — illegal hookups.

"It's a serious problem," he said. "It's also a problem that the sanitary district says must be eliminated."

Sump pumps, which come in two varieties, are used to remove stormwater from footings, window wells and outdoor entrance ways of homes. The water is supposed to be drained into backyards or into an approved storm sewer.

FREQUENTLY, HOWEVER, in order to keep their backyards dry, homeowners divert the pumps to an overhead sewer, which connects to the sanitary system. That's where the problem is caused.

"The sanitary system is simply not built to handle this extra flow," Creamer explained. The addition of stormwater to the sanitary sewers causes two main difficulties:

- The sanitary district treats any flow in the sanitary sewers, thus incurring unnecessary extra expense.

- Overflow in the sanitary system forces backup, meaning: "Somebody's going to get sewage in their basement," as Creamer put it.

In its ongoing house-to-house inspection of the Colonial Heights subdivision, the public works department has encountered numerous cases of actual or suspected illegal hookups to the sanitary system. According to Creamer: "It's pretty much of a common thing in every house."

IN SOME CASES, he said, homeowners express a willingness to cooperate by agreeing to disconnect the sump pump, while in other cases, homeowners become adamant in refusing to comply. In "many" instances, said Creamer, homeowners have refused entry to inspectors, leading him to believe they're hiding an illegal hook-up.

He said that often, homeowners are not aware that they may have an improper connection in their houses. "Sometimes, these plumbing changes were done three or four owners back," Creamer said, "and the people living there now don't even realize it."

He also said he sympathized with some of the homeowners who revert to illegal connections in order to cope with poor drainage in their backyards. "I don't condone violations, but I can somewhat feel sorry for the people," he said.

One solution to illegal connections is homeowners banded together and installing a plastic pipe in their backyards to take care of the excess storm water, Creamer said.

HE INDICATED that he began the house-to-house survey with the Colonial Heights subdivision because "we have had some problems there." The village's public works department will proceed with its inspections in other neighborhoods that are on village-owned separate sewer systems, while the sanitary district will inspect the combined sewer area and the sewers it owns. The sanitary district has the authority to levy stiff fines for noncompliance with its ordinances, which include removal of illegal connections to the sewers.

Creamer said the inspections will be a continuing process to ensure that once improper connections are removed, they aren't hooked up again. He expressed faith, however, that Mount Prospect residents will comply with the MSD regulation. "If people are aware of the problem, I really sincerely think they'll cooperate. I've got the highest hopes in the world that they will."

THIS IS WHAT THE empty A&P grocery store in downtown Mount Prospect may look like by fall. Delir Inc., Chicago, was given the go-ahead last night by the village board to remodel the building, at Central Road and Main Street, for a banquet hall. The board also created a liquor license for the new establishment, which would be called "Casa de Ora." The Spanish-style building was designed by Stanley de Furgalski.

Lower speed limits, more stop signs sought

Slow auto traffic, residents urge

Residents of both the east and west ends of Mount Prospect asked the village board last night to adopt traffic control measures to reduce or slow down the flow of traffic in their neighborhoods. Petitions were submitted seeking:

- A reduction in the speed limit on Euclid Avenue between Wolf and River roads.

- Posting of stop signs at three intersections in the Brickman Manor subdivision.

- Retention of Forest Avenue in the newly annexed Prospect Meadow subdivision as a limited access street.

The Euclid petition, signed by 102 residents of Euclid between Wolf and River, asked that the 45 m.p.h. speed limit be lowered to 30 for the safety of youngsters on route to nearby River Trails Junior High School, Indian Grove School and River Trails Park District facilities, and for homeowners whose driveways front on Euclid.

Spokesman Donna Weber, 1806 Euclid Ave., noted that when widening of the road is completed, Euclid will be a four-lane highway, which she said would pose a threat to youngsters attempting to cross the street. She asked the village board to endorse the homeowners' request to the Cook County Highway Dept. that the speed limit be reduced.

VILLAGE TRUSTEES, however, balked, contending that the road is intended to move traffic, and that the speed limit of other major thoroughfares, such as Elmhurst Road and Busse Road, would also have to be lowered to a comparable level.

Trustee Mario L. Caylor, who lives in the area, eventually withdrew her motion that the village board go along with the homeowners' request, and substituted a motion, which was passed, directing the village manager to ask the county to conduct a study of the area to determine an appropriate speed limit.

In the Brickman Manor subdivision, spokesman Joyce De Latour, 1740 Tano Ln., presented petitions signed by 154 residents seeking stop signs at the intersections of Indigo Drive and Carib Lane, Indigo and Corktree Lane, and Indigo, Mandel Lane and Wood Lane.

She said there have been "a number of near accidents and a recent serious injury" in the area. Some of the extra traffic in the subdivision may be generated by the detour due to Euclid Avenue construction.

The board instructed the police department to conduct traffic counts in the area.

IN THE PROSPECT Meadows subdivision, spokesman Paul Logan, 624 Oriole Ln., asked that the board keep Forest Avenue as a dead end street in order to discourage motorists from cutting through the subdivision, which would connect Kensington Road and Rand Road. He introduced petitions signed by 62 of the 85 homeowners in the area supporting the limited access street.

The village administration had indicated when the subdivision was annexed to the village last month that some streets may have to be made thoroughfares to facilitate police patrols and street maintenance.

The petition was referred to the safety committee for study.

Lunch programs were once again the topic of discussion for the Dist. 26 Board of Education as the board last night in a split decision approved a budget including salary increases for the food service department.

In a 4-3 vote the board approved a $159,900 food service budget for 1974-75, which represents a $16,300 increase over last year. Included in the measure is a provision for a 10 per cent salary increase for the food director, a raise which did not meet with the approval of board members Lloyd Demel, Ted Wittenberg and William Haase.

The three dissenting board members objected to the $700 raise in salary because they felt food director Barbara Oehl was involved in the recent furor surrounding an ill-fated pilot lunch program.

The program, which involved substituting frozen lunches purchased from Mass Feeding Corp. of Elk Grove Village for district-prepared lunches, received resounding disapproval from parents when it was instituted last month.

The project, which was to have lasted approximately two weeks, was canceled within a week of its inception.

BOARD MEMBERS who voted in favor of the budget said the 10 per cent raise was in line with pay hikes which have been approved for other district personnel. They also said the board should not be vindictive because of the failure of the pilot program.

The food service budget had been scheduled for action at the board's last meeting but objections to a proposed 15 per cent salary increase for Mrs. Oehl caused the board to ask the administration to review the matter.

The proposed 5 per cent reduction in the food director's salary, which decreased the proposed salary from $8,100 to $7,700, did not reduce the total budget since the $400 difference was transferred to other areas.

The budget also reflects increases in food costs of $12,200. Because of a 36 per cent increase in commodity prices since April, 1973, and in anticipation of possible future food price increases, the board also approved the administration's recommendation that lunch prices for students be increased from 40 cents to 45 cents. The lunch price to adults will increase from 60 cents to 65 cents.

Policy statements before school board

The Dist. 23 Board of Education will consider several proposed new and amended policy statements at a meeting today at 7:30 p.m. at the administration office, Palatine and Schoenbeck roads, Prospect Heights.

Included in the proposed changes are provisions to reimburse the partial cost of medical exams required for new teachers; partial reimbursement for travel expenses; a policy to allow students who do not meet minimum educational standards for receipt of a diploma to receive a certificate of attendance so they may enter ninth grade; a policy to withhold a student's report card for his failure to pay for lost or damaged school property, and a job description for the school nurse.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

"We are working on it in earnest and have the Centex builders and Johnson Furnace Co.'s full cooperation," said Zettek. "When the homes in question were built, they were inspected by the FIA and so legally, I suppose, they are not our responsibility. But we have put ourselves in the position of attempting to help and resolve the problem," Zettek said.

Elk Grove officials knew of faulty furnaces for 2 years

by JERRY THOMAS

During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 58, and his wife, Verma, 50, of 20 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a serviceman Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors checked furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Reitenbach, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Reitenbach said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records that showed over 100 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Reitenbach.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zettek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zettek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 6,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOMES WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Keswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

George Fiedler of Johnson Corp. said that in most cases, furnace parts have not been defective. He blamed the leaks on poor ventilation due to improper installation of the furnaces.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

A veteran teacher retires

Lois McCord, kindergarten teacher at Fairview School, retired last week after 28 years of teaching, 17 of them in Mount Prospect. Her current two classes totaling 43 children had a farewell picnic and presented her with two gifts that are in the "priceless" category. Hostess for the party was Bernita Hellerich, 402 N. Oak St., a mother of one student.

First the children presented Mrs. McCord with a luncheon cloth that each child had signed and Mrs. Hellerich had embroidered. The graffiti-like "signatures" were, of course, "printed" and many were particularly special. In one name an "e" had been omitted and had been sort of squeezed in on top of the other letters. In other names, some letters were backwards, many out of proportion — all very precious.

THE OTHER GIFT was a poem-song written especially for the occasion by Mrs. Hellerich. Robert Vaughn of Douglas Printing on Emerson St. printed the poem on silver metallic paper with sheet music background and framed it. The words go to the tune of The Alphabet Song:

This is what we want to say,
Thank you for our kindergarten days.
Poems, songs and Show and Tell,
Sounds and numbers we've learned well.
All of us are in accord,
We love you, Mrs. McCord.
At the bottom was the statement, "To Mrs. Lois McCord, in recognition of all the kindergarten children before us."

Summer's here, swim pools open

Get those swim suits in shape, kids. Two of the Mount Prospect Park District's swimming pools have opened for the season, and the third will open on Friday.

Open swim is available at the pools at Meadows Park, on Northwest Highway near the Arlington Heights border, and at Kopp Park, 420 W. Dempster St., from 1 to 3 p.m. and from 7 to 8:30 p.m. daily. Family swim hour will be from 6 to 7 p.m. daily. The pool at Lions Park, 411 S. Maple St., will open Friday with the same hours.

Season passes, available at the three pool sites, cost $10 for an individual child under 14 years of age; $15 for an adult; or $25 for a family of up to five persons, plus $3 per additional person. Children six years of age or under swim free if accompanied by an adult. Season passes are limited to residents of the park district, and this year for the first time, will be honored at pools in the Arlington Heights and Des Plaines park districts.

Daily fees are $1.25 for adults and 75 cents for children under 14 years of age. They can be obtained by residents or non-residents of the park district.

Swimmers must provide their own bathing suits and towels, and persons with long hair must wear swimming caps. Lifeguards are provided.

Psychiatric treatment for 2 in obscenity case

Two unincorporated Wheeling Township residents, charged last March in an alleged pornography-prostitution ring, Tuesday were ordered to see a court psychiatrist. The hearing on the charges against the pair also was continued to July 16 in the Niles branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

Robert Boyer, 49, of 1210 Boxwood Dr., was charged with obscenity, indecent solicitation of a child and failure to buy a Chicago business license for his photo studio after police said they found more than a half-million photographs of nudes and sexual acts in his apartment. Shortly after, Jack Kiesert, 47, of 16 E.

Willow Rd., was arrested and charged with obscenity, being a keeper of a house of prostitution and felony pandering. ACCORDING to Chicago police, who made the arrests with Cook County Sheriff's Police, Kiesert operated a prostitution ring, supplying Boyer with models for his photo sessions.

Police said five witnesses were available in court Tuesday. Subsequent to the initial charges, Boyer was charged with one count of contributing to the delinquency of a minor and Kiesert was charged with two counts of the same crime, police said.

Assistant State's Atty. Paul Perry, assigned to the case, Tuesday said only a small percentage of the hundreds of thousands of pictures were actually "obscene." Many he said merely showed nudes. Of the obscene pictures, Perry said only about 30 involved juveniles.

Some half dozen children have been identified by police, Perry said. It is believed the father of a Wheeling boy and the father of a Mount Prospect girl are among those who signed the complaints for contributing to the delinquency of minors. Names of those filing complaints are being withheld to insure their anonymity, Perry said.

Boyer is free on $3,000 bond and Kiesert is free on $2,500 bond.

$485,000 roof-repair job for schools OK'd

Members of the Elk Grove Township Dist. 59 Board of Education have decided to fix all leaking roofs in the district despite the fact bids for the job came in more than $100,000 higher than estimated last year.

The board accepted low bids for the repairs at 18 district buildings, totaling almost $485,000. The board plans to pay for most of the work from the current year's budget with the rest to come from the 1974-75 district budget.

The job was originally expected to cost about $350,000 when a survey of district roofs was made last summer, but rising costs of materials shot the price considerably higher, according to Adolph Danta, director of buildings and grounds for the district.

THE BOARD had planned to pay for the job with some $400,000 in "unanticipated" state aid which the district received this year through the state-aid formula, the same formula which district officials predict will substantially cut aid to the district within three years. The board transferred the funds to the district building fund at its Monday meeting, approved a revised building fund budget for the 1973-74 school year.

The preliminary budget for the 1974-75 school year had included funds to pay for the majority of the roof repairs, so instead of cutting the amount from the budget entirely, the board will now use part of the money (about $100,000) to make the difference of the cost of the entire roofing project.

In other action, the board learned that Dist. 59, which had been in a "holding" status following a visit from a state evaluation team, has now been recommended for full state recognition, according to Supt. James Erviti.

"Based on good faith and their efforts so far, I have recommended full recognition to Springfield," said Hugh Creary, education specialist from the state Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. "I will go back to the district in September to make sure all things have been taken care of," Creary earlier told The Herald. ERVITI TOLD THE board Monday night that he expects to hand Creary a detailed health program, among other things, because the evaluator was especially concerned about the lack of an outlined health program.

School board member Al Domanico chastised his fellow board members for their lack of reaction to the accreditation, compared to their reaction when they learned the district had not received immediate recognition. Domanico's remarks touched off a mild controversy among board members and Erwin Stevenson, assistant superintendent for instruction, Erwin Stevenson.

The board also approved 5 per cent raises for administrator's new contracts, as was earlier agreed by the board. A review of the contracts will be made again this fall following settlement of a controversy between district principals and Erviti. The board attorney, Frank Hines, also was granted a pay raise, from $30 to $34.50 per hour.

Dems name woman, labor rep as conference delegates

Democrats from the 12th Congressional District, in a surprising vote, elected two Elk Grove Village residents to represent them at the National Democratic Conference in Kansas City next December.

Elected were the "running mates" of two Democratic party leaders who had been considered the most likely choices. The delegates will be Walter Williamson, a labor representative, and Julie Sass, who had the backing of most of the female "delegate electors" who participated in the balloting.

Williamson benefited from a large block of votes which he apparently attracted through an alliance with Herbert (Hub) Stern, chairman of the Lake County Democratic delegation, which had the largest bloc of votes under the weighted voting system used in the balloting.

Donald Norman

With 22,983 votes from Lake County, Williamson finished first among 24 candidates with 45,828 votes. Mrs. Sass, who had the benefit of all the votes also pledged to Donald L. Norman, Wheeling

Julie Sass

Township Committeeman and the other favorite in the race along with Stern, collected 35,172 votes to narrowly edge Norman for the second delegate position. Norman collected 34,662 votes. Stern, who attracted less than 5,000 votes from the Cook County portion of the congressional district, ran a poor fourth 26,913 votes.

Herbert Stern

IN A MOVE apparently engineered by

Stern, the voting was conducted by secret ballot. On a motion by Robert E. R. Fritz of Palatine the delegate electors first voted 29 to 25 to conduct the secret ballot, a move which was opposed by Norman and his Wheeling Township supporters.

State central Committeeman representative Daniel Pierce then called for a roll call vote on the secret ballot question, with each delegate casting his weighted vote. The secret ballot was decided upon with a total of slightly more than 45,000 weighted votes, very close to the number which Williamson received in the delegate election.

Midway in the balloting, Schaumburg Township Committeeman John Morrissey announced he was withdrawing his name as a candidate for delegate. Morrissey said that all 10 electors from his township had agreed to case their vote for Norman, although they could not agree on the second candidate.

MRS. SASS AND Norman received all 17,856 votes cast by the Wheeling Township delegation. In addition Mrs. Sass attracted seven of the 10 voters in Elk Grove Township, seven from Schaumburg Township and three from Palatine Township.

Stern and Williamson each received the entire Lake County vote, confirming reports that they had allied themselves in order to overcome what was expected to be a victory by Norman.

Williamson, however, received nearly unanimous support from Hanover and Elk Grove Townships, and attracted six of the 10 voters from Palatine Township, while Stern was able to claim only four votes outside of Lake County.

Dist. 57 wrapup

Budget approved, may be updated

A tentative budget of more than $4.3 million approved by the Dist. 57 Board of Education Monday will probably be revised and updated before its final approval later this summer, according to district officials.

In his budgetary presentation to the board Monday, Business Mgr. J. C. Busenhart cited several revisions in figures from those outlined in the original 48-page tentative document. Because major computations for the budget were made two months ago, changes such as salaries for teachers and administrative personnel had to be revised upward to reflect higher salary schedules.

Taking up the biggest chunk of anticipated expenditures for 1974-75 is the education fund of $3.332 million. Included in this fund are teacher and administrative salaries.

Speaking for the finance committee which reviewed the document before its presentation Monday, board member Michael Ward said the budget represented "The most sensible conclusions we could come to based on what we know."

Contract gets quick OK

The board gave swift approval to the recently negotiated 1974-75 teacher contract. The new salary schedule increases the starting salary for teachers from $8,025 to $9,000. Top pay for a teacher with 30 credit hours past a master's degree and 18 years experience jumps from $16,810 to $18,168.

General increases in the pay scale average between 9 and 12.5 per cent including increments.

The board also approved average salary increases of 9 per cent for principals and administrators. Salaries for the district's seven principals range from $18,100 to $22,700.

The district's top three administrators also received pay boosts averaging 9 per cent. Supt. Earl Sutter will receive $32,500 compared to $29,900 this year; Assistant Supt. Dwight Hall will earn $25,700 compared to $23,310 this year, and J. C. Busenhart, assistant superintendent for finance, will have his earnings upped from $24,675 to $26,800.

Pay schedules for secretaries and custodians also were approved. The five-step salary ladder for secretaries will range from $3.15 per hour to $4.25 per hour next year. This year's scale was $2.50 per hour to $4.15 per hour.

Custodians will be paid according to a three-step schedule ranging from $4 per hour to $5 per hour compared to a range this year of $3.60 per hour to $4.70 per hour.

An expenditure of $21,000 was approved for remodeling work slated to be done in the industrial arts wing at Lincoln Junior High.

Almost $7,000 of that amount will be spent for work to be done in the home economics food lab and $14,000 will be spent for work in the practical arts room and the two rooms across the hall from the practical arts room.

The money does not include the cost of labor which will be done by the district maintenance staff.

Lincoln to join conference

The board approved a recommendation to allow Lincoln Junior High to affiliate with the Mid-Suburban Junior High School Conference for athletic competition in basketball, track and cross-country. The league includes the four junior highs in Dist. 59.

Affiliation with the league will facilitate scheduling for athletic events, according to Supt. Earl Sutter, and will provide competition with schools which feed into High School Dist. 214.

Project participation urged

The board approved resolutions calling for participation in federally funded reimbursement projects. Funds approved for expenditure under provisions of the National Defense Education Act Title II library program totaled $6,783.15.

An appropriation of $4,360 for installation of a dust collection system in the practical arts room at Lincoln Junior High was approved. Reimbursement from NDEA funds will total $2,024.62.

Surveillance system faulty

Schools may cancel monitor contract

The Dist. 21 Board of Education will consider cancelling a contract with the firm that installed an $85,000 surveillance system that still isn't working nine months past the completion deadline.

In January, the board threatened to take legal action against Temptron Inc. for failing to make the system function satisfactorily. The complex electronic system is designed to monitor schools and the administration building to prevent damage from fire and vandalism.

Instead of placing the company in default in January, the board opted to hire a consulting engineer to determine the exact nature of the problems with the system.

Now school officials again are considering cancelling the Temptron contract and apparently feel the company will never be able to complete the job.

DIST. 21 Supt. Kenneth Gill said Tuesday attorneys for the district are studying the Temptron contract and will be present at a special school board meeting Thursday to discuss the possibility of suing the company. The meeting is set for 8:15 p.m. at the administration building.

If the school board decides to take that route, it would invoke the performance bond posted by Temptron and request that the bonding company seek another firm to finish the job.

Gill said the individual components of the system appear to be functioning separately, but problems occur when the unit works as a whole.

The surveillance system consists of sensors placed in each of the 17 schools in the district, which are monitored by a computer in the administration building. Additional staff; an increase of $4,575 in the amount for in-service training; an increase of $7,175 for new library books; an increase in the nurses budget due to hiring of an added staff member; an increase in custodial services of $10,000; an increase of $10,000 for the purchase of new textbooks; an increase of $3,000 in cafeteria salaries; a $3,600 increase in food supplies due to commodity price hikes; and a possible insurance rate increase accounting for an added $5,500.

The board is expected to approve a resolution at its meeting tonight calling for posting of the budget for 30 days as required by law. After the document is posted and a public hearing held, the board will take final action.

Hendren speculated that final approval will come by the end of July but revisions and updating still may be made after the board's final action.

THE SENSORS are intended to detect heat and motion within the buildings and malfunctions in the heating systems. The problems are relayed to the central computer by electronic impulses, triggering alarms in the operations office where the console is set up. The person monitoring the computer then contacts the fire department, police or maintenance personnel to correct the trouble.

Gill said although the computer has reported some boiler failures at local schools in the past few months and prevented vandalism at Frost School in Mount Prospect two weeks ago, last weekend windows were broken at three different schools without detection, sidered before a prediction on taxes can be made.

The 1972 and 1973 tax levies in the district were $2.80 per $100 assessed valuation.

THE TENTATIVE budget, which reflects a substantial increase over last

Three policemen attacked in separate incidents

Three Mount Prospect policemen were attacked in separate arrest incidents in the past three days. None was injured seriously, although one policeman was treated at a local hospital.

The most recent incident occurred about 1:45 a.m. Tuesday after police arrested Michael P. Casey, 24, of Chicago, in the parking lot of Jake's Pizza, 302 W. Northwest Hwy. Casey, who was in a fistfight with another man, was charged with disorderly conduct.

When Casey was brought to the police station, police said he took a swing with his fist at patrolman Thomas Daley. At that point two policemen rushed to subdue Casey and in the ensuing scuffle, Casey fell against the booking room door, damaging the door frame, police said.

CASEY REFUSED medical aid despite a bump on his head, police said. One policeman added that he had seen the same bump on Casey's head in Jake's Parking lot.

An additional charge of aggravated assault for the attack on Daley was then lodged against Casey, who is to appear Aug. 14 in the Mount Prospect branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

In the second incident, Patrolman Michael Salatino received a tetanus shot at Northwest Community Hospital in Arlington Heights, after he allegedly was bitten by a prisoner Sunday. Salatino also was treated for cuts and bruises allegedly suffered in the incident.

According to police, Salatino was attacked by John A. McGuire, 19, of 127 N. Donald Ave., Arlington Heights, as police tried to arrest him on the sidewalk in the 600 block of N. Wille Street. McGuire also allegedly pushed and punched Patrolman Robert Randolph who was assisting with the arrest.

POLICE SAID they had responded to a call of a domestic quarrel when they saw McGuire drop a knife into the grass after being asked to stop by police. Police said McGuire may have been under the influence of drugs.

McGuire was charged with aggravated battery and resisting a peace officer in the 8 a.m. incident. Bond was first set at $5,000 and then raised to $10,000 by the court. A hearing will be June 26 in the Mount Prospect court.

Police expand hours of records section

The records section of the Mount Prospect Police Department has expanded its hours to 15 hours a day.

In an "attempt to provide improved services to the community and the police department," Police Chief Ralph Doney said the new hours of the record section will be from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. Monday through Friday. Previously, the records section closed at 5 p.m.

Doney also said that if enough need is shown, the records section may open on Saturdays also. Both residents and policemen will be able to find required information more easily under the new system, he added.

Will have no impact on tax rate

Village to help hospital by selling municipal bonds

The Arlington Heights Village Board has agreed to lend its name to Northwest Community Hospital for the purpose of selling tax-exempt municipal revenue bonds.

Village trustees received assurance from two legal and financial experts Monday night that the plan to sell revenue bonds to refinance past hospital debts and buy new equipment would have absolutely no impact on Arlington Heights' tax rate, bonding power or liability.

The bonds would be paid for exclusively by operating revenue from the hospital. But because they are municipal bonds and thereby tax-exempt, they carry a 2 to 2.5 per cent lower interest rate than conventional bonds.

THE DIFFERENCE will save the hospital nearly $250,000 a year on an $18 million loan.

Dave Williams, an attorney with Chapman and Cutler bond lawyers in Chicago, said the proposed bond sale represented no obligation to the Village of Arlington Heights and would not affect either the village's debt incurring powers or taxes.

Under the ordinance passed Monday night, the village would take over technical ownership of the hospital for the life of the bond issue, probably 20 years.

But the agreement specifically holds the village harmless in any lawsuits filed against the hospital, Williams said, and the hospital will be required to carry enough insurance to cover all claims against it.

The ordinance does not actually sell the revenue bonds, but puts the village in a legal position where they can be sold in the future, according to Arlington Heights Village Atty. Jack M. Siegel. Besides Northwest Community Hospital, it authorizes village bond sales for any other hospital or nursing home, he said.

MUNICIPAL BOND financing for the hospital is possible because of Arlington Heights' home-rule powers. The practice has been upheld by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Even if the hospital were for some reason unable to pay off the bonds, the debt would not be transferred to the village, Williams said.

"A default would not be a default against the Village of Arlington Heights and would have no effect on the village," he said.

A financial adviser to Northwest Community Hospital from Smith Barney and Co., a Chicago bond house, said issuing the revenue bonds would not impair any other bonds the village might want to sell.

"The market place looks at these as separate entities," he told the village board. Nor will it affect the village's financial rating which determines interest rates on bond sales, he said.

ACCIDENT VICTIM is transported to Northwest Community Hospital after a two-car collision Tuesday at Central and Arlington Heights roads. According to police, a car driven by Greta A. Doerfert, 35, of Mount Prospect, was turning left when it struck one driven by Nancy J. Rudin, 20, of Arlington Heights. Both drivers were treated and released from the hospital. Mrs. Doerfert was cited for not yielding.

High vacancy rates and rising costs are making it difficult for apartment building owners to maintain their premises and they cannot afford the added cost of smoke detectors, according to a prominent village property manager.

H. Miles Gordon told the village board Monday. "We are now taking care of our property. We may not be able to do that (if the ordinance is passed) and we'll be getting a lot of ghettos and tenements around here."

"People are going to have to save money somewhere," he said.

Gordon is manager of several buildings in Arlington Heights including the Scarsdale Apartments and the office complex at Campbell Street and Wilke Road.

THE VILLAGE board approved the smoke detector ordinance, which would apply to future as well as existing buildings, by a 4-to-3 vote Monday. However,

What smoke detector rule would require

Here's what Arlington Heights' proposed smoke detector ordinance would mean to you.

If you're a homeowner, you will be required to buy and install at least one detector in your home when you apply for a building permit to expand or renovate your house.

However, permits for the construction of patios and the installation of central air conditioning are not included.

Nike base apparently will stay with Army

by JOE SWICKARD

The Arlington Heights Park District apparently has lost the battle for control of the Arlington Heights Nike Base at Central and Wilke roads.

The park district and the Army have been struggling for the remaining 75 acres of the base. The district wants to build a golf course on the land and the Army wants to use it as a weekend training center for about 1,000 Army Reservists.

BERG MET LAST month with representatives of area legislators and members of the Committee for Utilization of the Nike Base, an umbrella group favoring the park's position, to discuss the problem. Berg agreed at the meeting to review the situation and make a recommendation to Sec. of the Army Howard Callaway.

Berg also agreed to meet with the legislators prior to his forwarding the final recommendation.

According to Goode, Berg "broke his promise," and "... the recommendation has gone to Callaway's desk this morning (Tuesday)."

Goode said a letter from Stevenson, and cosigned by Sen. Charles Percy and U.S. Rep. Philip M. Crane, R-12th, will be sent to Callaway asking that the base be turned over to civilian control.

A MEETING between the legislators and Berg is scheduled to take place "in a day or two," Goode said. He said he hoped the letter plus the meeting would cause Berg to reconsider his recommendation.

The two-page letter calls upon Call-

More Nike base picketing promised

The Army's apparent decision to hold on to the Arlington Heights Nike Base could bring about large-scale picketing and demonstrations throughout the Chicago area.

"We'll give them time to see what they are going to do. We said we weren't going to picket for a while, but we could picket not only the base here but recruiting stations, Glenview (Naval Air Station) and Fort Sheridan," said a spokesman for the Citizens' Committee for the Utilization of the Nike Base.

The committee picketed the base for two consecutive weekends, but pulled off the lines June 9 pending Army undersecretary Eugene Berg's announcement.

THE SPOKESMAN said the "time for diplomacy" may have passed. He said more dramatic gestures may be necessary.

"They say they need the base for the Reserves. Well, they won't need the base if they can't recruit any reserves, can they," he said.

"We'll be asking the men to join the Navy or Marine reserves at Glenview or the Army at Sheridan. We won't be un-American. We just want people to know what the Army's doing," he said.

ANOTHER MEMBER of the committee has adopted a wait-and-see attitude pending the outcome of the meeting this week and legislators' letter to Sec. Callaway. He said the letter "seems fair enough."

He drew some hope, he said, from the support given by U.S. Rep. Philip M. Crane, R-12th, and U.S. Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., in signing the letter.

"You can't ask for more than that. It shows we have political support from all viewpoints," he said.

Thomas Thornton, park district director, appeared ready for a defeat, but apparently is willing to follow it up with new tactics and objectives.

"When I read the story yesterday, I wasn't very optimistic," Thornton said.

He said he hoped the meeting and letter would produce a favorable decision by Callaway. "Once they (the Army) make a decision, it'll be a long time before they reverse it," he said.

The letter suggests the money could be spent for upgrading O'Hare, Glenview Naval Air Station or Ft. Sheridan for the Reserves.

"It's my understanding," Goode said, "that work would have to be from the ground up. It'd be breaking ground and going up."

He tempered any enthusiasm that might be generated by the letter and the meeting. "I just can't be optimistic," he said.

At least one couple overcome by fumes

by JERRY THOMAS

During the two years that Elk Grove Village officials have been quietly studying the problem of defective furnaces installed in local homes, at least one family has found out first hand the danger of leaking furnace fumes.

John Thompson, 58, and his wife, Verna, 59, of 20 Wapole Rd., had their furnace checked and cleaned by a serviceman Dec. 18, 1972. Less than a month later, the couple was overcome by fumes one night and had to be treated at Alexian Brothers Medical Center for carbon monoxide poisoning.

"It was a cold night and almost our last one on earth," recalled Thompson, who is blind.

"All that night while the furnace was laboring to keep our home warm, carbon monoxide fumes were being forced through the house," he said.

"A hole big enough for a man to put his hands through had rusted out in the heat exchanger and exhaust fumes were being mixed with hot air and slowly poisoning us," he said.

THE HERALD disclosed Tuesday that defective furnaces which may be leaking deadly fumes are installed in an estimated 1,700 or more Centex Corp.-built homes in the village. At least 150 furnaces have already been repaired because of the hazardous leaks in furnace heat exchangers.

The Herald also disclosed that village officials, alerted to the situation by two local heating contractors in the spring of 1972, have been studying the problem ever since without warning residents.

As part of their research into the furnace leaks, village inspectors checked furnaces in homes of 25 village employees early this year. The check, according to Building Director Thomas Rettenbacher, was made to determine if the problem was village-wide or confined to an area specified in reports from heating contractors.

"We checked a few employees' homes outside the designated trouble area and found no defective furnaces," Rettenbacher said.

"At this point, we did not doubt local contractors' records that showed over 100 replacement jobs on furnaces and parts in a concentrated area of homes but wanted to find a pattern," said Rettenbacher.

VILLAGE PRES. Charles Zetek said "the sincerity of the village's efforts and concern is shown by our action three weeks ago to hire an expert to help us resolve the problem."

"We didn't want to alarm people unnecessarily," said Zetek. In the first months of the village's efforts to study the leaking furnaces "we didn't really appreciate it as a substantial problem," he said.

Centex Corp. has built virtually all of the 6,000 homes in Elk Grove Village. Its houses have all been equipped with one of the various models made by Johnson Furnace Corp. of Bellevue, Ohio.

Local heating contractors Robert Wing and Scott Hassler noticed a pattern of corrosion and cracks causing leaks in heat exchangers of the Johnson furnaces they were servicing in the village and informed village officials.

HOME WHERE THE problem is occurring were built in 1965 and 1967 and are located in an area bounded by Salt Creek on the east, Devon Avenue on the south, Keswick Road on the north and the village limits on the west.

George Fiedler of Johnson Corp. said that in most cases, furnace parts have not been defective. He blamed the leaks on poor ventilation due to improper installation of the furnaces.

Local heating contractors attribute the problem in part to poor furnace design but primarily to improper installations, which in some cases violate village codes.

"We are working on it in earnest and have the Centex builders and Johnson Furnace Co.'s full cooperation," said Zetek. "When the homes in question were built, they were inspected by the FHA and so legally, I suppose, they are not our responsibility. But we have put ourselves in the position of attempting to help and resolve the problem," Zetek said.

THOMPSON SAID he had no idea until now that there was a widespread problem of defective furnaces in the community.

"Today, I can talk about it with some knowledge but that night I had no inkling and if not for the fact that my wife was restless and could not sleep, we might both be dead," said Thompson.

"That night I felt fine but tired and went to bed early and my wife, who had complained of feeling bad, stayed up sitting in bed," he said.

"She woke me and complained of feeling extremely ill. I got up, found my way to the bathroom for some water and on the way back began feeling sick myself," said Thompson.

"Now I know why. The fumes were high in the room and when I was in bed lying down, I was not breathing as much of them as Verna."

When his wife said she was unable to swallow the water, Johnson recalled, he knew something was seriously wrong and made an emergency call to the village fire department.

"I remember opening the door to the firemen and the minute one fireman walked in he said, 'I think I know what the problem is' and he walked straight to the furnace room," said Thompson.

"He told us later he had just bought a home in the village and found his heat exchanger was corroded exactly like ours was."

"I couldn't believe it and still don't understand how the previous inspection didn't show that or how the people who lived in the house before us could have lived there without incident," said Thompson.

THE COUPLE, who is childless, do not believe they have suffered any permanent damage from the fumes. Thompson said Johnson Furnace Co. provided a replacement heat exchanger at no charge and he only had to pay for the installation. Johnson has since ended its free replacement policy, blaming the problem on bad installations.

Dems name woman, labor rep as conference delegates

Democrats from the 12th Congressional District, in a surprising vote, elected two Elk Grove Village residents to represent them at the National Democratic Conference in Kansas City next December.

Elected were the "running mates" of two Democratic party leaders who had been considered the most likely choices. The delegates will be Walter Williamson, a labor representative, and Julie Sass, who had the backing of most of the female "delegate electors" who participated in the balloting.

Williamson benefited from a large block of votes which he apparently attracted through an alliance with Herbert (Hub) Stern, chairman of the Lake County Democratic delegation, which had the largest bloc of votes under the weighted voting system used in the balloting.

Donald Norman

Julie Sass

Herbert Stern

With 22,983 votes from Lake County, Williamson finished first among 24 candidates with 45,628 votes. Mrs. Sass, who had the benefit of all the votes also pledged to Donald L. Norman, Wheeling

Township Committeeman and the other favorite in the race along with Stern, collected 35,172 votes to narrowly edge Norman for the second delegate position. Norman collected 34,662 votes. Stern, who attracted less than 5,000 votes from the Cook County portion of the congressional district, ran a poor fourth 26,913 votes.

IN A MOVE apparently engineered by

Stern, the voting was conducted by secret ballot. On a motion by Robert E. R. Fritz of Palatine the delegate electors first voted 29 to 25 to conduct the secret ballot, a move which was opposed by Norman and his Wheeling Township supporters.

State central Committeeman representative Daniel Pierce then called for a roll call vote on the secret ballot question, with each delegate casting his weighted vote. The secret ballot was decided upon with a total of slightly more than 45,000 weighted votes, very close to the number which Williamson received in the delegate election.

Midway in the balloting, Schaumburg Township Committeeman John Morrissey announced he was withdrawing his name as a candidate for delegate. Morrissey said that all 10 electors from his township had agreed to case their vote for Norman, although they could not agree on the second candidate.

MRS. SASS AND Norman recieved all 17,856 votes cast by the Wheeling Township delegation. In addition Mrs. Sass attracted seven of the 10 voters in Elk Grove Township, seven from Schaumburg Township and three from Palatine Township.

Stern and Williamson each received the entire Lake County vote, confirming reports that they had allied themselves in order to overcome what was expected to be a victory by Norman.

Williamson, however, received nearly unanimous support from Hanover and Elk Grove Townships, and attracted six of the 10 voters from Palatine Township, while Stern was able to claim only four votes outside of Lake County.

3 traffic signals to be installed

Three sets of traffic signals, costing $298,709.75, have been approved by the Arlington Heights Village Board and will be installed this summer.

Permanent traffic lights will be put in at New Wilko and Algonquin roads at a cost of $74,921.80. Half the cost will be paid by the state, and one-quarter each by the village and by the City of Rolling Meadows.

Traffic signals and left turn lanes at Rand and Kennicott were approved at a cost of $169,307.15. Traffic signals at White Oak and Arlington Heights Road will cost $52,480.80.

The village will use motor fuel tax funds to pay for the new signals.

Arthur Ave. plan progresses

Another link in the Arthur Avenue thoroughfare plan has been approved.

Sigwalt Street will be extended east this summer to join up with Davis Street, which in turn will be improved south to Dryden Avenue. The project will cost $312,329.50.

Widened and resurfaced, Davis then will be complete to Arthur Avenue where a new grade crossing is planned across the Chicago and Northwestern railroad tracks.

The village recently started special assessment proceeding for resurfacing Arthur between Davis and Central Road.

Rezoning petition rejected

The village board has rejected a rezoning petition for a three-unit apartment building at 309 W. Campbell St. A vacant single-family home now sits on the property.

Water main approved

A Rand Road water main from Hintz to Chestnut has been approved at a cost of $79,953.50. Village utility tax money will be used to pay for the improvement.

Zoning hearing fees rise

Fees for a hearing before the village zoning board of appeals will be going up. Hearing fees for large projects will be $250, small buildings $50, and for single-family home fence variations $30.

Sign variance granted

Gatehouse Apartments have been granted a variation to put up an identifying sign at the head of their driveway at 2134 S. Goebbert Rd.

Village ordinance generally prohibits special name signs for apartment complexes.

Licensing bill opposed

The village board has voted to formally oppose pending state legislation that would take away a large number of village licensing powers.

the ordinance cannot legally be enacted without a clear five-vote majority of the Board. The matter will come up again July 1.

On the average, detectors would cost about $100 to $150 per apartment unit. Building owners would have from three to seven years to install the systems, depending on the size and type of their building.

Single-family homeowners would be required to install a home-model smoke detector that costs about $50, only when major remodeling is undertaken.

The devices would be mandatory in all new construction.

THE VILLAGE BOARD was divided on whether to make the ordinance retroactive.

Trustee J. Burton Thompson said he saw "no clear and present dangers" to justify forcing building owners to buy the new detection systems.

"We've had some fire fatalities, other communities have had more. I don't think this is so revolutionary that we need require it in every building in town," Thompson said.

Heights Fire Prevention Bureau to install a device sooner. The units cost about $50 each, and the fire prevention bureau can advise you on the type of detector to buy, where and how to install it.

GENERALLY, the alarm should be placed in the sleeping area of the house.

If you live in a typical four-story apartment building, one smoke detector, in the sleeping area, will be mandatory in your apartment by July 1, 1979.

Devices also will be located in building stairways, corridors, lobbies, lounges, meeting rooms and other public areas.

Three-story apartment buildings must meet the same requirement by July 1, 1980.

The detector deadline for hotels, motels, dormitories, lodging houses, educational, assembly and institutional buildings — except churches — is July 1, 1977.

Churches and all other buildings will have to be equipped with detector systems by July 1, 1981.

The requirement for smoke detectors also extends to one-story industrial, mercantile and storage buildings that exceed 6,000 square feet in area, and all such buildings over one-story in height.

Any one-story business building exceeding 9,000 square feet in area, and all business buildings over one-story also are required to install detector systems.

Village Pres. Jack Walsh and Trustee Dave Griffin agreed with Thompson.

HOWEVER, TRUSTEE Richard Durava said the detectors represented a major fire prevention breakthrough because they are designed to alert people to the presence of smoke and gas which are the major killers in a fire.

Attorney William Moore, representing the owners of the Shalamar Apartments, 2206 S. Goebbert Rd., said developers who built their buildings according to the codes in effect at the time should not be made to spend additional money to update fire safety standards.

Retrospective application of new safety standards have been upheld by the Illinois Supreme Court.

Cost of the apartment detectors will be passed on to tenants in the form of rent increases of several dollars a month, Durava predicted. And the increased cost will not be dropped once the detectors are paid for, he said.

"I actually suspect that, over the long run, they (building owners) will make money on the deal," he said.
